MARKET GARDENERS GROW RICH

There is lots of money made in early vegetables. Everybody admits that the very earliest vegetables are produced from Salzer's Northern Grown seeds. Think of having radishes in fourteen days; lettuce in twenty days; potatoes in forty days; peas in forty-six days, and splendid cabbage in fifty-five days from day of sowing seed!

If You Will Cut This Out and Send It with $1 money order to the John A. Salzer Seed company, LaCrosse, Wis., you will get free thirty-five packages earliest vegetable seeds and their great seed catalogue, or for six cents postage a package of Fourteen Day Paris Radish seed and their seed catalogue. Cranberries may be used instead of currant jelly as the flavoring for an excellent dessert. Wash a pint of the berries, and cook them in just enough water to keep them from scorching. If a particle more is added it will spoil the result. As soon as the berries pop, put them through a colander, add a cupful of granulated sugar. Dissolve two tablespoonfuls of geletine in four tablespoonfuls of cold water, add the berries as soon as sweetened, stand on ice, and stir until the pudding begins to thicken. Then mix well with it a pint of thick cream. Put in a mold until it hardens.

The Noxall Incubator.

We show herewith the Noxall Incubator, invented and manufactured by G. W. Murphy & Co., a well-known business firm of Quincy, Ill. The following testimonials show the merits of the Noxall Incubator better and more forcibly than anything we could say. They are certainly very strong ones, and G. W. Murphy & Co. should be highly gratified that their incubator wins such golden opinions:

STATE LEGISLATURE.

WORK OF THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings in the Senate and House, Comprising a Brief Summary of the Week's Business.

St. Paul, Jan. 10.—The members of the lower house convened at noon, Secretary of State Berg calling the body together.

Daniel Shell nominated Capt. S. R. Van Sant for speaker. It was seconded by William Lockwood and J. J. Furlong.

Mr. Gibbs moved that the election be made by acclamation.

The presiding officer thought the constitution provided for a roll call and so ordered.

Mr. Van Sant received every vote in the house.

Messrs. Gibbs, Shell and Anderson were accorded the honor of escorting Mr. Van Sant to the speaker's chair. The other caucus nominees were then elected. The most of the day was devoted to choosing seats.

The Senate.

Lieut. Gov. Clough was prompt in calling the senate to order, and almost before the senators knew it the chaplain, Dr. Robert Forbes of Duluth, was offering prayer. Then Senator Day of Martin was called on to act as secretary pro tem. He took the oath before Lieut. Gov. Clough. The new secretary, S. A. Langum, was his assistant. A roll call showed all but two of the senators present. Within thirty minutes the senators were all sworn in, about a dozen coming to the front at the same time. Nominations for secretary of the senate were next in order. Senator Thompson of Fillmore nominated S. A. Langum of Preston, and on motion of Senator Stevens of Ramsey the secretary cast the ballot of the senate for Mr. Langum. The other caucus nominees were then elected.

A resolution was introduced for a committee of three to be appointed to confer with a similar from the house on joint rules.

On motion of Senator Greer, Senators Greer, McHale and Sevatson were appointed as a committee to notify Gov. Nelson that the senate was fully organized and ready to receive any communication.

St. Paul, Jan. 11.—The crowd which gathered in the house chamber to witness the inauguration ceremonies was not as large as that of two years ago, but the hall was very comfortably filled and the gallery was crowded. The governor was escorted to the hall by the joint committee of the senate and house and entered the chamber between Senator Greer and Representative Gibbs. After the trio came Senator Washburn, followed by ex-Governors Ramsey, Merriam, Pillsbury, McGill and Hubbard. The state officers, elective and appointive, brought up the rear of the procession. Senator Washburn and the ex-governors occupied seats at the foot of the stairway leading to the right of the speaker's chair. Gov. Nelson's seat was in the customary place, at the right of the speaker, and Lieut. Gov. Clough had a chair on the speaker's left. Gov. Nelson, in his address, treated each subject as briefly as possible, omitting the details and quoting totals only in the statistical tables, and this manner of handling the subject was appreciated by the audience, who, interested as they were, found it abundantly long.

Bills Introduced.

A number of bills were introduced in the senate. The more important were:

Senator Ozmun, senate file, amendments to the military code providing for the establishment of two battalions of four or five companies and two majors. It makes the term of service three years or more, as the commanding officer may prefer. It substitutes the drill regulations of the United States army for Upton's tactics, increases the lines for each battery of artillery from 20 to 50 and establishes a system of supplying the state troops with uniforms, by the state, and makes an appropriation of $10,000 for this purpose.

Senator Sevatson's senate file No. 2, was a bill to provide for the destruction of Russian thistles and other noxious weeds.

Senator Roverud introduced senate file No. 3, it being a bill to provide for the appointment of deputy village clerks and recorders, the same having to file with the county clerk notices of such appointment.

Senator H. F. Stevens introduced senate file No. 4, a bill proposing an amendment to the constitution of the state to authorize the taxation of the property of sleeping, drawing room and parlor cars and others, companies and owners.

Senate file 5, a primary election bill, introduced by Senator Wyman, was mainly to prevent non-voters from voting at primary elections, and, secondly, to prohibit men voting in precincts to which they did not belong.

Senator Miller introduced senate file No. 6, an act to amend chapter 95 of the General Statutes of 1878. The bill has reference to the destruction of Russian thistles.

Senator Allen introduced senate file No. 7, a bill to tax all railway lands not used as right of way, for gravel pits, side tracks, depots, and all buildings and structures necessarily used. The companies are to continue to pay taxes into the state treasury upon gross earnings, as at present.

The lieutenant governor announced that Senators Day, Collister and McHale had been appointed a committee on rules.

The house was twenty minutes late in calling to order, and then many of the representatives did not get in to hear Rev. Robert McCune of Worthington make his first prayer. The roll had just been called when Secretary Langham appeared to inform the house that the senate had organized. The committee on rules was announced by Speaker Van Sant. Representatives Anderson, C. F. Staples, Kelly, Reeves and Robbins. Chief Clerk Dowling returned from the senate and notified the house of the near approach of that body for the joint session of the legislature to hear Gov. Nelson's address. Following the message the house and senate immediately adjourned.

St. Paul, Jan. 12.—The legislative grind is now in full swing. The senate began work promptly this morning at 10 o'clock and at noon adjourned until 7:30 Monday evening. Among the important matters that came up was the introduction of a resolution by Senator Wyman for the appointment of a commission to look into fire relief matters in Pine and other counties, and a bill to make up the relief fund deficit. Senator Spencer of Duluth, profiting by the experience of Duluth in annexing the town of Fond du Lac and New Duluth, introduced a bill providing for the settlement of the question of indebtedness in such cases. These towns ran up heavy bills and debts before being taken into Duluth. Senator Wyman introduced a bill appropriating $140,000 for the expenses of the legislature. Senator Keller of Stearns caused the senators to open their eyes by the introduction of a bill cutting down the salaries of state officers, by which he claims to save $26,540. Some of the figures he gives are as follows: Governor, $2,500; secretary of state, $1,750; state auditor, $1,800; treasurer, $1,750; librarian, $1,000; commissioner of labor, $1,200. The same gentleman also introduced a resolution asking the attorney general to report whether he had taken any proceedings against any companies or individuals holding over 5,000 acres of land. This is believed to be a hit at some of the lumber companies.

Senator Ringdahl introduced a bill providing for the transfer of the state oil department to the secretary of state's department.

The house, in its brief two-hour session this morning, passed the busiest time it has yet known. The session was really the first in which the representatives have found themselves in a position to undertake the transaction of any business at all outside of that of organization, and the opportunity was improved by the passing of one bill and the introduction of a number of others, some of them of wide importance.

Though the St. Paul people may be satisfied with the present capitol bill, such is not the case everywhere. This dissatisfaction was voiced in the house this morning by one of the Populists of that body, E. J. Moore of Becker county. House File No. 6 was the number of the bill, and it sought the repeal of that provision of the last legislature whereby the building of the new capitol was authorized. Some of the representatives failed to pay due respect to the seriousness of the motives of Representative Moore of Becker, and were inclined to laugh at him, but his fellow Populists were all in solemn earnest and most of them, judging from their looks, thought it as worthy a measure as its author appeared to.

St. Paul, Jan. 13.—Every member of the legislature who could has gone home for the short legislative vacation, and the hotel lobbies are deserted. Half a dozen representatives and senators could be found at the Windsor after a close search, and in the different senatorial headquarters a few workers were visible, but nothing more. The capital politicians are living to-day in the memory of the contest thus far and in anticipation of what the future is to bring forth. The senatorial contest is expected to take a decided turn early next week. The large number of members who are now unpledged will come from their constituents, in most cases, ready to talk. It may as well be said now as at another time, that there is nothing so far to justify any talk of "boodle." The canvass has been conspicuously free from anything of this sort, and that it may continue to the end is the desire of the best men on both sides. Gov. Nelson is not rich; Mr. Comstock is rich, but not a man who will stoop to such methods; Mr. McCleary is not rich, and Mr. Washburn and his managers gave it out in the very beginning that they would win on their merits or not at all. It has been suggested that some of the unpledged members have been waiting for offers to pay their "campaign expenses," but even if such suggestion is true—and there is nothing to prove it—the members so waiting will wait in vain. It will be an election without the expenditure of money for the purchase of votes and without improper influences of any sort brought to bear.

THE HORTICULTURISTS.

Their Meeting at Lake City Draws to a Close.

Lake City, Minn., Jan. 12.—The horticultural convention elected officers as follows: President, J. M. Underwood, Lake City; vice presidents, E. H. Dartt of Owatonna, S. D. Richardson of Winnebago City, Mrs. A. A. Kennedy of Hutchinson, R. S. Mackintosh of Lawedon, J. H. Stevens of Minneapolis, Mrs. Jennie Stager of Sauk Rapids and J. D. Barrett of Brown's Valley; treasurer, Ditus Day, Farmington; executive committee, Wyman Elliott of Minneapolis and J. S. Harris of La Crescent for three years, Prof. S. B. Green of St. Anthony Park and Clarence Wedge of Albert Lea for two years; J. P. Andrews of Faribault and J. R. Moyer of Montivideo for one year. Under the new constitution the secretary is to be elected by the executive committee.

Killed in a Collision.

Sioux Falls, S. D., Jan. 13.—Vene Fuller, who used to be one of the foremost politicians among the farmers of this county, was killed in a railroad accident in Pennsylvania last Saturday. He was taking a car load of poultry from his farm in Missouri to New York, and was sleeping in the caboose when the train was struck by another train. He was instantly killed.

A Smart Thief Arrested.

New Orleans, Jan. 13.—One of the two men who were arrested with "Major" Sampson, the Chicago murderer, a few days ago at the Illinois Central depot here, has been identified. He is Andy Craig, one of Chicago's smartest thieves.

Fire at Owatonna.

Owatonna, Minn., Jan. 13.—The hotel and saloon of Thomas Roche were totally destroyed by fire at 3 o'clock this morning. Loss, $12,000; insurance, $8,000.

BIMETALLISM.

A Conference of Its Leading Advocates Recently Held.

Washington, Special.—Gen. A. J. Warner, president of the American Bimetallic league, admitted to-day that a conference of leading bimetallists from different parts of the country had been held in this city recently. In this connection he said:

"It was the decision of the conference that a strong and growing sentiment is manifesting itself in favor of unity for the friends of bimetallism, in a bimetallic party, and to appear directly to the people on the money issue alone. The consideration which seems to be leading to this result is the widespread conviction that there is no hope of restoring the bimetallic standard through the Republican party, nor through the Democratic party, as that party is now controlled, and, on the other hand, that it is equally impossible to accomplish this result within the lines of the Populist party or unite on the Omaha platform, those in favor of restoring the bimetallic standard as it was before 1873 on the government control of the money question."

Venturing Into Matrimony.

If a young couple be sure enough of their own ability to shape their lives according to their actual means in venturing into matrimony they are blessed indeed, writes Mrs Barton Harrison under the fascinating title "Heigh Ho! for a Husband" in the January Ladies' Home Journal. This is so rarely the case that a young man holds back to let thirty find him in possession of sufficient income to pay his household bills before he dares assume the privilege of a wife.

There can be no reason against a girl marrying young if circumstances insure to her a reasonable protection against the disheartening apparition of poverty shivering behind the lamps and silver bonbon dishes of her wedding presents.

A Simpler Plan.

Mr. Newedd—Well we are beginning housekeeping, and I presume the simplest plan will be for me to give you a regular amount every week for expenses. Just figure up what it will cost.

Mrs. Newedd—I could never do that in the world—so many things to count, you know; but let me see. Oh, I have it! I have thought of a much simpler plan.

The Very Past.

They sat in the twilight and talked of the past.

"Hiram," she was saying, "just twenty years ago to-night I first became aware that you had kindled a flame in my heart."

"Yes, Melissa?"

"That," she mused reflectively, "was about the last kindling I know of your doing, Hiram."

He did not speak for a long time. When he did it was concerning something else.

Art of the Future.

"Ah, my boy."

"Well, old man."

"How is it none of the pictures from your collection are at the loan exhibit this year?"

"Three of them are away on their vacations and the other one has a cold in her head."

Then they parted.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

WORK OF THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings in the Senate and House, Comprising a Brief Summary of the Week's Business.

St. Paul, Jan. 16.—The house met with a quorum present. The secretary of the senate appeared and reported the passage by the senate of a joint resolution providing for the appointment of a committee to investigate and report on the suffering from the Hinckley forest fire and to recommend some legislation on the subject.

Mr. Johns rose to a question of privilege, and presented Speaker Van Sant with a handsome gavel, the gift of the pupils of the St. Paul manual training school.

Speaker Van Sant, in accepting, made a brief reply, extending his thanks to the donors.

"The Commercial clubs of the Twin Cities, representing some 2,000 business and professional men of the cities of St. Paul and Minneapolis, respectfully request your earnest consideration of the following:

"The dread calamity of September, 1894, when the world stood appalled at the Minnesota forest fires, should not be without its lesson. In October, 1894, a largely attended meeting of the citizens of various parts of the state, at the rooms of the St. Paul Commercial club, strongly favored state laws looking to the preservation of our forests and the prevention of recurring holocausts so disastrous to human life. In Canada, and we believe in some parts of the United States, wise laws exist, and necessary measures are taken to the desired end, with beneficial results. It is our earnest request that the subject receive the consideration at your hands that it seemingly deserves."

The joint resolution providing for the appointment of a committee of three from the senate and five from the house to inquire into the particulars and recommend some legislation concerning the sufferers by the Hinckley forest fires was, on motion of Mr. Anderson, adopted.

St. Paul, Jan. 17. — The senatorial caucus has been called for Friday evening at 8 o'clock in the hall of representatives

In the Senate.

The senate sat for about an hour. Senator Ozmon of Ramsey introduced a bill to prevent corrupt practices in elections. This provides that no person shall lend or give any valuable consideration to any voter to procure the election of any person to public office; that any person so offending shall be guilty of a felony and shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary for not less than two years and not more than five, and shall also forfeit $500, with costs of suit, to any person who shall sue for the same.

Senator Johnson's bill to amend the game laws provides that no person shall hunt, pusue and kill wild birds of all kinds, making the penalty for so doing $10 a minimum and $25 a maximum fine, or suffer from ten to thirty days' imprisonment. The idea is to protect all wild birds from boys and others.

Senator Smith introduced a bill relating to the receiving of deposits in insolvent banking associations, making it punishable with state imprisonment for five years, to receive money when it was known that the institution was insolvent, or likely to become so.

Senator Henry Keller introduced a bill providing that the compensation of the president of the senate or speaker of the house shall not exceed $600, and that of the members shall not exceed $300, whether the session is longer or shorter than sixty days.

A bill was introduced by Senator H. R. Spencer to establish a state normal school at Duluth. This school shall be under the direction and supervision of the state normal school board, and the city of Duluth shall donate to the State of Minnesota not less than ten acres of land in Duluth for the proposed building of the school.

The House.

The house confined itself entirely to the introduction of bills.

Bills were introduced in the session of the house as follows:

By Representative Johnson—An act to provide licenses for peddlers and prescribing enactments for violation thereof.

By Representative Foss—An act to provide for a graduated tax upon gifts, inheritances, devises and bequests in certain cases.

By Representative Foreman—An act to repeal chapter 466, Laws of 1891, relating to the salary of probate judges.

By Representative Cant—An act to regulate and define power and authority of boards of park commissioners in Minnesota.

By Representative Knudson—An act to permit cities or villages incorporated under special laws to amend their charters to conform to state laws.

By Representative Ferris—To provide for the establishment of a state fish hatchery.

By Representative Gunn—To amend chapter 147, an act relating to bounties on wolves.

By Representative Mickleson — An act to regulate passenger train service on railroads operated in Minnesota.

By Representative Underleak — To prohibit the aiming of firearms at a human being.

By Representative McGrath—An act to appropriate additional money for opening certain closed waterways.

St. Paul, Jan. 18.—The meeting of the house started off with a broadside by Henry Feig of Kandiyohi county. It was in the form of a resolution providing for a legislative committee of five, to be named by the speaker, "to institute a rigid inquiry into the financial condition and business affairs of banking and other corporations in the state, which now hold on deposit or otherwise any public funds whatever."

The bill appropriating $20,000 to reimburse the state fire relief committee was passed unanimously by both house and senate. It will be the first measure of the twenty-ninth session to go to the governor for approval.

Representative Dahl introduced a bill in the house by which the present bench of the Fourth district will be increased by the addition of two judges. The bill provides for their appointment by the governor until successors can be elected in the next general election. If the bill is passed the eight judges so provided for will be able to handle present litigation in Hennepin county much more effectively.

Some of the bills which go to make up the series to remedy defects in the state banking laws were introduced today. Zier of Minneapolis introduced the first, providing for the publication in the newspapers once a year of a list of unknown depositors and the amount due each, where it exceeds $10. It also provides for the making of a return of the same to the probate court.

Mr. Dahl introduced the bill to prevent fraudulent bankruptcy. Representative McCune introduced the arbitration bill, advocated by the labor organizations, providing for a board, to be appointed by the governor. Henry Johns introduced a corrupt practices election bill, similar to that of Senator Ozmun.

In the Senate.

The senate met promptly at 10 o'clock and sat a little over an hour. The time was largely passed in the introduction of bills and resolutions. Senator Yale, on Tuesday, introduced a resolution that the senate adjourn sine die on March 8, and this was taken up for discussion. But, after talking the matter over, the senators thought that it was too early in the session for a decision, and so it was defeated. The only important bill introduced was that of the Ramsey county delegation, and this was virtually to do away with boards of public works. The bill provides that all existing laws relating to the board of public works, of cities, shall apply to the directors the same as if only referring to the board. It is really aimed at the appointment of a director to do the work, instead of the board, as heretofore, and when such director is appointed the boards are to cease to exist.

Senator Day of Martin introduced a joint resolution, expressing disapproval of the railroad pooling bill, now before congress. Senator Day said the bill was uniquitous; it simply allowed the railroad companies to fix what rates they choose, and such bills as this made anarchists. He moved the rules be suspended and the joint resolution have its final passage. Senator Stevens asked that the joint resolution be referred to the railroad committee, which would be appointed Thursday. Senator Day said he would like to see it passed at once.

Senator Stevens moved an amendment that it be referred to the railroad committee, to report as once, and Senator Day finally consented, and the resolution went to the committee on railroads.

Legislative Proceedings.

Both houses held short sessions. In the senate Mr. Allen introduced a bill to establish the office of forest commissioners and for the prevention of forest and prairie fires, which provides that the governor shall appoint a forest commissioner, who shall hold his office for three years. His duty shall be to prevent prairie fires, to investigate the etent and character of the original and secondary forests in the state, together with the amounts and varieties of the wood and timber growing therein; he must ascertain the different methods of lumbering pursued, and the effects thereof upon the timber supply, water power, navigation and climate of the state; the approximate amount of revenue annually derived from the forests in the state; the damage done to them from time to time by fire; the methods used, if any, to promote regrowth of timber. The information so gathered by him, together with suggestions, shall form an annual report to the governor. The supervisors of towns containing forest or prairie lands in the state are constituted fire wardens, and they are to have posted where tourists and hunters can see them, notices against camping prairie or forest fires. These wardens are not to be paid more than $1.50 per day, and shall not be paid in any one year for more than ten days' services in extinguishing fires. The penalty for setting fire to forest or prairie lands is $100 or imprisonment not exceeding one month. Railroad companies have to annually cut and remove from their right of way all grass and weeds.

Senator John H. Smith's bill on the preservation of the game and fish of the state creates a board of five game and fish commissioners, to be appointed by the governor for six years. One or two slight amendments are made to the General Laws of 1893.

In the house a bill was introduced by Mr. Douglas which defines the duties of the public examiner. In addition to general supervision over banks and banking institutions, he is given power to prescribe the manner and form of keeping and auditing books and accounts; to call for special and general reports, failure to comply subjecting such bank or corporation to $160 fine for every day's delay; to appoint special examiners, that expense to be borne by the bank for which they are named; to compel testimony and to appoint temporary receivers; to require at least one, but not oftener than five times, a report of every bank and corporation, such report to be complete and in the form he prescribes.

Mr. Henrick's bill makes the legal rate of interest 6 per cent.

Mr. Blagik's bill provides for a bounty of 1 cent a pound on sugar manufactured in this state from beets, sorghum or other yielding canes or fruits.

St. Paul, Jan. 20.—In the house Henry Feig called up his sensational resolution on the inquiry into the condition of the financial institutions of the state by a committee of five representatives and carried the question through by a unanimous vote, despite the introduction of a substitute resolution and various objections as to the expense which might be incurred by such an investigation. To clinch the passage of his resolution, Mr. Feig moved to reconsider, and to lay the reconsideration on the table, and this, too, was voted through by a large majority. By this means the house "burned its bridge behind it," the action taken preventing the reconsideration of the subject at any time during the session, thus winning a double victory for the resolution.

Synopsis of bills introduced into the house:

By Barta—A bill providing for amendments to the homestead law and defining a homestead as follows: An agricultural homestead to consist of eighty acres, minus such portions as are used for mining or manufacturing purposes, no part of which shall be included in the platted portion of any village or city; a village homestead, not to exceed one acre, no portion of which shall be found in the laid out portion of any city exceeding 10,000 inhabitants, and a city homestead, not to exceed 12,000 square feet in area.

By Ferris—To provide for the appointment of a board of game and fish commissioners of five members, to be appointed by the governor, one of the members to be its "executive agent" at a salary of $1,200, and further amending existing laws.

By Gutterson—Allowing townships at their own election to abolish the election of overseers and the collection of a poll tax and to transfer the duties of overseers of the highway to the township supervisors.

By Hartshorn — Providing for the forfeiture of certain lands granted any corporation to aid in the construction of a railroad, and which have not heretofore been earned.

Senator Masterman of Washington county introduced a bill amending the law providing for the designation of state's depositories. The amendment provides that the designation of state's depositories shall be made by a board of audit, consisting of the governor of the state, state auditor, secretary of state and attorney general. When the state funds are thus deposited, the state treasurer is relieved from liability on his bond so far as the depositing of funds is concerned. "It is the same bill as was passed two years ago, but was not signed by the governor," said State Treasurer Koerner.

RUTH EXONERATED.

The School Commissioner of South Dakota Was All Right.

Pierre, S. D., Jan. 20.—State Auditor Hipple makes the following statement: The statement that Col. Thomas H. Ruth, the commissioner of school and public lands, had aided or abetted W. W. Taylor to defraud the state through violating the statute in regard to sending out vouchers too late for the school apportionment of 1894 of the permanent school fund is absolutely untrue. The statute provides that on or before the 10th day of May and November of each year the commissioner of school and public lands shall cause to be made an estimate of the amount of funds which shall be in the treasury on July and Jan. 1, and shall notify the counties of their apportionment so made. The statements of the clerk, supported by the statements of the officials, was that on the 10th of November Col. Ruth should have sent out the money so appropriated. It now appears that he could not do so under the law until Jan. 1.

IS A DRAWN BATTLE.

THE SENATORIAL CAUCUS ADJOURNS WITHOUT RESULT.

Washburn Receives 61 and Nelson 45 Votes on the First Ballot—On the Sixth and Last Ballot Washburn's Vote Is 55, Nelson's 60.

St. Paul, Jan. 20.—The senatorial caucus adjourned at 12:10 this morning without action, which means that the contest will be thrown into the legislature. Balloting will begin Tuesday at noon.

The first ballot resulted: Washburn, 61; Nelson, 45; Comstock, 14; McCleary, 14; scattering, 7. The sixth and last ballot stood: Nelson, 60; Washburn, 55; Comstock, 14; McCleary, 8; Pillsbury, 2; Tawney, 1, showing a loss of six for Washburn and a gain of five for Nelson.

The caucus was an exciting one throughout, and it was evident that the original supporters of Washburn and Nelson would give up the fight under no consideration, and it would appear that there will be a deadlock that will be hard to break. The caucus broke up amid considerable excitement.

For Washburn.

Senators, Allen, Barr, Culkin, Day, Dunham, Greer, Howard, Johnson, W. E., Larson, Masterman, Miller, Morgan, McArthur, Potter, Pottgeiser, Roverud, Spencer, Sperry, Stebbins, Theden, Thompson, Wyman, Yale—23.

Representatives Anderson and Grondahl—2.

For Buckham.

Senator Stockton and Representative Taylor—2.

For C. A. Pillsbury.

Senator Houge—1.

For Lind.

Representatives Feig and Scofield—2.

The Second Ballot.

On the second ballot Senator Cole changed from Comstock to Washburn, and Senator Collester changed from Comstock to Nelson, Lloyd from McCleary to Nelson.

Representative Anderson from Ives to Nelson, Boxrud from Washburn to Nelson, Buck from Comstock to Nelson, Dressel from McCleary to Nelson, Ellingsen from Washburn to Nelson, Foss from Comstock to Nelson, Mallette from Washburn to Nelson and Tallman from McCleary to Nelson.

The total vote was Washburn, 59; Nelson, 55; Comstock, 10; McCleary, 11; Pillsbury, 1; Buckham, 2; Ives, 1; Lind, 2—141.

The Third Ballot.

On the third ballot the changes from the second ballot are as follows: Senator Heneman changed from Comstock to Lind; Stockton from Buckham to Washburn.

Total vote: Washburn, 60; Nelson, 57; Comstock, 9; McCleary, 10; Pillsbury, 1; Buckham, 1; Lind, 3.

The Fourth Ballot.

On the fourth ballot the changes from the third are as follows: Senator Heneman back from Lind to Comstock.

Representative Burke from Nelson to Washburn; Feig from Lind to McCleary; Lockwood from McCleary to Nelson; Schofield from Lind to McCleary; Taylor from Buckham to Nelson; Wright from Washburn to Pillsbury.

The Fifth Ballot.

On the fifth the following changes occurred from the votes as noted in the fourth: Senator Cole from Washburn to Comstock.

Representative Bickford from Washburn to Comstock, Feig from McCleary to Comstock, Kendall from Nelson to McCleary, Martin from McCleary to Tawney, Meman from Washburn to Comstock, Shell from McCleary to Nelson.

Total vote—Nelson, 58; Washburn, 57; Comstock, 14; McCleary, 9; Pillsbury, 2; Tawney, 1—141.

The Sixth Ballot.

Changes noted, Representative Burke from Washburn to Nelson, Kendall from McCleary to Nelson. Senator Thompson was absent.

Total vote—Nelson, 60; Washburn, 55; Comstock, 14; McCleary, 8; Pillsbury, 2; Tawney, 1. Total, 140.

Adjournment.

A motion to adjourn was then carried by a rising vote of about 70 to 60, as it appeared from the press gallery, although it was announced as 70 to 41.

Miss Stevenson Dead.

Asheville, N. C., Jan. 20.—Miss Stevenson, daughter of Vice President Stevenson, died here yesterday afternoon. Miss Mary Stevenson was the eldest daughter of the vice president. She was taken ill last summer and was removed to Bar Harbor for her health. An attack of pneumonia had prostrated her. She improved a little at Bar Harbor, but had a relapse, and consumption developing, it was decided to remove her to Asheville.

POLICE SUSPENDED.

Heroic Action Taken by the Mayor of Des Moines.

Des Moines, Jan. 20.—Mayor Hillis last night suspended the chief of police, two sergeants and an officer for being implicated in giving protection to gamblers. The matter is an outcome of an investigation being made by the grand jury into gambling, which has been openly conducted in this city for some time. More suspensions are expected. Meanwhile the suspended officers threaten to bring charges against the mayor and others.

MANY LIVES LOST.

A Steamboat Disaster on the Ohio River.

Owensboro, Ky., Jan. 22.—The big New Orleans packet, the State of Missouri, struck a rock on the Indiana side of the Ohio, near Alton, Ind., about 6 o'clock last evening and went down in fifty feet of water. She gave a heavy lurch forward and rapidly sank.

Four passengers on the City of Owensboro passed here to-day, who were picked up near the Kentucky shore. They swam for life on planks and reached the willows. One reached the shore and the others remained in a tree for many hours until rescued. They were W. C. Leathers, from Hopkins county, Ky., and a man named Gregory of Cave-in Rock, Ill. The names of the other two could not be learned. These passengers report that the boat struck the stone near the stern and gave a lurch forward. A yawl was launched but it was soon sunk. The boat lurched again and a second yawl was put off from the sinking boat in which four women passengers and some of the cabin passengers managed to get places. Leathers never swam before, but managed to keep afloat until he reached the willows. He saw four men drown near him but was powerless to act. One chambermaid was picked up by a boat from a farm house near by and several rescued passengers were picked up further on and taken up to Louisville by the steamer Tell City.

One yawl that was upset by frantic passengers was full of women and children and all are thought to be lost. There were fifteen cabin and thirty deck passengers, and a crew of sixty on board. The surviving passengers think that at least thirty-five were lost. The cabin and upper works of the boat floated away. The Texas and pilot houses were towed ashore. The City of Owensboro got out part of the freight from the cabin deck. Mr. Gregory recovered his overcoat which he had left behind when the boat sank. In less than ten minutes from the time the boat struck she had gone down.

At Rockport and here, as well as at intermediate points, the bank is lined with skiffs picking up pieces of furniture and watching for dead bodies, but the current is too swift for small craft to get out far. No names of those drowned can be learned here. The boat is a total loss.

Cincinnati, Jan. 22. — Commodore Laidlow and Capt. Wise, officers of the Cincinnati, Memphis and New Orleans Packet company, who owned the State of Missouri, insist that reports from their officers on the wrecked steamer state that the boat and entire cargo are a total loss, but they do not believe the passengers were lost. It is impossible to get track of all who reached either bank of the river, but they report that the officers are of the opinion that all the passengers will be accounted for.

SCOTT WAS LYNCHED.

His Body Is Found in the Niobrara River.

O'Neill, Neb., Jan. 22.—The body of Barrett Scott, Holt county's defaulting treasurer who was taken from here by a party of disguised men on the night of Dec. 31, was found in the Niobrara river to-day with a rope around his neck. The man had been hanged undoubtedly by his captors and the body was then thrown into the river.

The ice in the river was cut where the lynchers had been followed. This was done yesterday, and to-day 100 men were on the scene dragging the river. The body was lying in seven feet of water and only a short distance from the bank. The body bore evidence that the victim was dead when cast into the water. Around his neck was a piece of rope about three feet long, a noose around the neck being tied in true hangman's style. The other end bore evidence of having been cut, showing that Scott had been hung until he was dead and then cut down and cast into the river. The body was minus a coat, but his watch and chain and other jewelry which was on his person the night of the tragedy, were still there. The face of the deceased confirms the truth of the story told by Mrs. Scott to the effect that in the fusillade which preceded her husband's capture he was slightly wounded in the side of the face. The crime for which Barrett Scott paid his life for on New Year's day of this year was the embezzlement of $70,000 of the funds of Holt county and the subsequent wrecking of the Holt county bank, practically impoverishing nearly all of the farmers and business men in Holt. The amount stolen from these confiding people is variously estimated, but aggregate about $160,000. The coroner's jury has found that Scott had been hanged and that George Mullihan, Moses Elliott and Mose Ray, now under arrest, and other Holt county citizens composed the mob.

Police Organize.

St. Paul, Jan. 22.—Another state organization was perfected when the police officers from the various parts of the state met at the Windsor hotel and organized the state department of police association. The meeting was very well attended. The following officers were elected: Officer John Kerr, Minneapolis, president; Chief Harry R. Armstrong, Duluth, first vice president; Chief C. Yates, Mankato, second vice president; Sergeant Fred G. Tageler, St. Paul, secretary; Lieut. William Budy, St. Paul, treasurer. Sergeant John Zirkelbach was elected chairman of the executive committee.

Mourning in Winona.

Winona, Minn., Jan. 22.—Charles Hoffbauer, who was blown to death at Butte, and whose body has not yet been found, was formerly a resident of this city, and his parents still make their home here.

More Troops Ordered Out.

Albany, N. Y., Jan. 22.—Gov. Morton has ordered the First brigade of New York city to report at Brooklyn to-day.

A great deal of unhappiness is caused by people who pry into the affairs of others and who maliciously repeat and enlarge upon little scraps of information they receive concerning the private affairs of friends and neighbors. These people are particular formidable because their mode of speech bears the stamp of sincerity. They usually approach the subject in hesitating, round way,, as if loth to give express to injure the character, of those whose absence renders them defenceless, it is not a part or their policy to give the maligned party the shadow of a chance to trace the unfriendly and oft times vicious accusations that are so blighting in their effects upon a sensitive nature.—Exchange.

"It is true," I asked a great think er, that England alone holds $2,500 000,000 of United States securities, bearing interest, including exchange of 6 per cent payable in gold?

Yes, according to the public statement of London statisticians. The secretary of the treasury says there is no public record this country showing the amount of foreign investments. We must therefore go to Europe to to learn not only how much we are indebt to Great Britain, but that at least $500, 000,000 additional of United States investments are held in France and Germany. This makes a total in three countries of $3,000,000,000, imposing an interest charge including exchanges of $180,000,000 per annum, a nice state of serfdom isn,t it?,,— Kate Fields Washington.

The year just passed has been a noteable one in national financering and closed with the currency question uppermost in the minds of all who take the slightest interest in national affairs. The capitalists, represented principally by the eastern banks, have a boon conceived a plan they started out on more than 20 years ago and all that is yet lacking is the retirement of government paper and have bank note issued in its place. Government receipts do not meet running expenses and to pay current obligations the secretary uses the gold reserve fund and to replenish this he has been issuing bonds, 100 million dollars; bearing 2 per cent in interest, payable in ten years, having already been issued and unless something is done to stop the drain as many more will be issued during the coming year. The bankers gravely told us that repealing the Sherman silver law would put our finances in good shape, but their predictions were not fulfilled. A revision of the obnoxious tariff laws imposed by the republicans was thought would correct the evil but it has only done so partially Now the bankers tell us that to righten the currency we must cancel the green backs and let them issue notes to take their place, They are lying just again Just as they always do. If the government would declare greenbacks and silver full legal tenders coin the seignorage and reduce expenses to receipts the final difficulty would be settled in agreement. And to further the good work a free silver law would be eminently fitting and satisfactory, So long the secretary continues to pay out gold on demand for greenbacks and silver certifis, so long will he have to continue issuing bonds to keep up that needless gold reserve and swell the profits of Wall street money sharks.

Prominent Republicans are already boasting that they will "Redeem Polk County from Peoples Party rule at the next election, They site the result of the last election in the country which shows that they gained about fifty per cent. and that a similer gain would land their victors in 1.96 if they continue to play in any where near as much luck as they did the first of this month, when a populist board gave four Republican papers the county printing at the highest bid, nothing can stop them from sweeping the country These four papers may be depended on to do yeoman service, for party and with the added prestage they have gained will no doubt make a hard fight for their party supremacy As for the populist papers, it is a well known fact that a thin and hungry dog fights hard and a share of the county printing would have spoiled their fighting powers. Our otherwise county commissioners evidently thought that they succeeded in spiking four of the enemies guns by their indulgence, but the question is will it work?

STATE OWNERSHIP.

ENGLAND GOES US ONE BETTER ON THE SUBJECT OF RAILROADS.

The "Conservatives" Have Taken the State Ownership Propaganda Away From the "Cranks," and the Latter Are Now For Free Travel.

Robert P Porter writes an interesting letter from London on the subject of state ownership of railways, from which the following is taken:

In England, sensible, farseeing, conservative statesmen and business men are strongly advocating the absorption of the railways by the state. This idea has long since passed out of the hands of the extremists and cranks and is receiving the best thought of those most deeply interested in internal commerce—the boards of trade and commerce and agricultural organizations. In short, the idea of national railways has crystallized and will probably become an accomplished fact this generation. While this phase of the question has taken itself to the realm of constructive legislation and is awaiting a bold and able hand to shape it into accomplished fact the cranks and faddists have gone a good step forward and are advocating not only state ownership of railways but free railway travel.

This last proposition will no doubt provoke a smile, but when ably presented and vigorously backed up by existing conditions in England it is novel and by no means unattractive.

The foundation of the argument in favor of free railway travel is, of course, the gigantic waste of the present system. Elaborate calculations show that every traveler who buys a ticket for a seat in an English railway train really pays for nine seats. The competition which seems to compel rival companies to run half empty trains between the same points at precisely the same time is, in fact, a charge upon the public. So are the innumerable boards of useless and enormously paid directors, so are the rival stations and other expenses peculiar to the present system. It is not contended that state control or free travel would absolutely remedy this waste, but the advocates of free travel do undoubtedly bring forward facts which indicate that the waste of seats under free travel would be but trifling compared with the existing waste from ticket travel. In short, it is estimated that all the people who could possibly want to travel if the railways of Great Britain were as free as the highways could be accommodated [illegible] present rolling stock.

Figures [illegible] showing [illegible] the [illegible] of bridges, and [illegible] ferries, in England, has [illegible] the actual cost to the public to one-sixteenth. Of course the additional number taking advantage of this for communication is included, [illegible] railways, like other highways, [illegible] and not [illegible]. The British public is paying over £15,000,000 annually for railway fares. Probably five or six times as many people would have used the rail had the fares been within their means. For the same free railway travel for the kingdom it is claimed, could be maintained. Mr Cooper said:

"The principle of free travel is not new, but old. We pay our highway rates and have good highways for it. Who would wish to return to the old system of turnpike gates with a toll collector every few miles? But the ticket box is a railway turnpike gate to every traveler and more deterrent than to pay our railway fares in rates and taxes, for in so doing we would get five or six times as much for our money. The expense having been paid, the British public would have gained the inestimable advantages and right of free railway travel over every railway in Great Britain and Ireland. Every man, woman and child would be free to enter any train [illegible], for as he or she pleased, and [illegible] nothing until the demand on the existing rolling stock exceeded its accommodation. So long as the existing rolling stock could supply seats for all no additional expense need be incurred. Rates and taxes equal to the present fares would be more than sufficient to pay all expenses, while the fares [illegible] the people's pockets instead of [illegible] the coffers of the railway companies would provide the money to pay the [illegible]."

"How do you answer the objection that those who stay at home would be made to pay part the expense of those who travel?"

"Why should they not, if free travel be a public advantage? They gain as much as those who travel. Pickfords' thousands of vans pay no tolls, they go over free roads, but who does not share the advantage that Pickfords derive from free roads? Those who now travel pay enough for the limited distance they go to convey themselves and the remainder of the population all over the railways of the country. All classes would gain. Those who now use the rail would exchange the right they possess of traveling over distances strictly limited by the fares for an unlimited right at a less cost to go when and where they please over all the railways in the country. [illegible] who now remain at home, [illegible] all by compulsion, for the difference between the total fares now paid and the share of the tax to be paid by those who now travel will obtain the same unlimited right of free travel of which they are now deprived. Free travel will be maintained by the whole nation at small cost to each and an immense [illegible]."

So much for the free railway travel theory. The more practical question is the causes which must in England, if not in the United States, ultimately lead to government ownership of railways.

THE WAR ON GREENBACKS.

The Financial Man of The Sun Says It Will Prove Ineffectual.

The financiers and the newspaper writers who have taken up this cry evidently assume that the opinions they hear expressed in their immediate neighborhood are the opinions of the majority of the nation, but if they could extend their inquiries beyond this restricted field they would discover that outside of the great money centers, like New York and Chicago, there is among the people not only no hostility to the greenbacks but an active friendship for them, which will protect them from every attack. Soon after the war ended this same cry that "the greenbacks must go," was raised with such effect that their retirement, at the rate of $400,000 per month, was ordered by congress, but as soon as the process had fairly begun it was stopped by an almost unanimous vote. Again, in 1875, their retirement was ordered by the resumption act, and again it was stopped by the act of February, 1878. Since then nobody, until lately, has attempted the destruction of the greenbacks, and it will not be seriously attempted now.

Two objections are made to the continued issue by the government of its promises to pay and to making them serve the purpose of money. One is that it is banking, which is a business in which it is said the government ought not to engage, and the other is that, under the law as it stands, the redemption of these promises in gold is a task too great for the government's powers. The efforts now making to perform it are, it is charged, not only ineffectual, but lead to a steady increase of the national debt and to a drain of gold from the country to Europe.

That the government may engage in the banking business, or in any other business that the people decide to be for the general welfare, is provided in the constitution, and whether the issuing of legal tender notes is or is not banking, it has been pronounced by the supreme court of the United States, which is the final arbiter of such questions, to be an exercise of the constitutional power to coin money. Those who disapprove of it must therefore convince the majority of their fellow citizens that it is not promotive of the public welfare, and this as yet they have failed to do.

As to the agency of the legal tenders in drawing gold from the treasury, and thus compelling an increase of the national debt to replenish the gold reserve, it is indeed true that the act of 1878, by peremptorily requiring the reissue of the greenbacks when they are redeemed pursuant to the provisions of the resumption act, makes them an instrument for draining the treasury of its gold, unchecked by the contraction of the currency which redemption without reissue would naturally cause. This evil, however, is created by legislation and can be cured by it. Even the very simple remedy of increasing the revenues of the government so that they shall equal its expenses, instead of falling short of them, would suffice. Until the revenue became insufficient the redemption of the greenbacks in gold gave us no trouble. The $100,000,000 of government bonds which were sold during the past year, and the $100,000,000 more which are probably going to be sold this year, have not been rendered necessary by the existence of the legal tenders. They have been a clumsy substitute for the short term bonds which should have been authorized by congress to meet the temporary needs of the treasury, and their issue is a perversion of law, if it is not distinctly illegal. The upshot of the matter is that, for the sake of enabling the banks to put out $500,000,000 of their own notes and make a profit by lending them as money, it is proposed that the country shall be saddled with an interest charge in perpetuity of $12,500,000 a year, and incur the risk of a financial crisis compared to which that of 1893 would appear insignificant. Nor would the maintenance of gold payments be rendered any easier nor the liability to gold exports be in the least diminished. The only difference would be that the task of keeping at par with gold $500,000,000 of paper money would be transferred from a single central power, with the whole wealth of the country behind it, to the 8,000 and more banks, mostly small ones, scattered throughout 44 states and each pursuing its own course without regard to that of its fellows. That such a scheme should receive the least countenance is amazing.—Matthew Marshall in New York Sun.

The Income Tax Suit.

John G. Moore has brought suit to test the constitutionality of the income tax. Mr. Moore is a member of the brokerage firm of Moore & Schley, through whom sundry senators scandalously made money by speculating in Sugar trust stocks while the sugar schedules of the tariff bill were under consideration in the senate.

Men like Mr. Moore, who have "money to burn," will find no difficulty in multiplying suits of this kind. Business is dull with eminent lawyers as with other people, and fat fees will induce those gentlemen to aid clients in finding out by expensive suits at law what they might learn much more cheaply by reading the decisions of the United States supreme court.

The income tax has come to stay. It is just, constitutional, and especially commends itself to the popular sense of right. It will be so altered by future congresses as to make it conform more closely to the demands of justice, but it will not be abolished. It will be graduated so that incomes below $5,000 shall be untaxed and incomes below $10,000 taxed at a nominal rate, while above that figure the rate will increase with the amount of the income.

The burdens of government will be laid upon accumulated wealth where they now rest upon industry. Superfluity instead of necessity will be made to pay.—New York World.

The Discredited Oracles.

Final returns show that the Wisconsin Populists cast 25,530 votes this year. In 1892 they cast 9,909. Figures of this sort rather shake one's confidence in the oracle who proclaims loudly that Populism is dead.—Chicago Times.

Populists Will Sweep the South.

Congressman Milford Howard of Alabama delivered an address to a large audience in Faneuil hall, Boston, last week, in which he predicted that the People's Party will carry every southern state in 1896.

America Leads the Nations in the March of Progress.

Among the wonders of the World's Columbian Fair the grandest was the exhibit of American products. The Exhibition was, in this respect, an object lesson of the grandeur and glory of the Republic. Among the exhibits from the United States no article of its class stood so high as Refrigerator Cure for Dyspepsia.

Certain French physicians cure colds by applying ice to the spine. Professor Pictet recently put before the French Academy of Medicine the whole system of frigotherapeutics. He began by experimenting on dogs, and found that when they were plunged into a bath at low temperature and were kept there for some time they became ravenously hungry. Being himself a sufferer from stomach disease, he had forgotten what it was to have an appetite. So he descended into the refrigerating tank at a temperature many degrees below zero. He wrapped a thick pelisse and other warm clothes about him, but after four minutes he began to feel hungry. At the end of eight minutes he climbed out of the tank with a painfully keen appetite. Many such experiments were made. All meals, taken after a short stay in the refrigerator, agreed with him. He found that his dyspepsia was cured after the tenth descent.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Extracting Teeth by Electricity.

Trials have been made in London with a new apparatus for the extraction of teeth by electricity. It consists of an induction coil of extremely fine wire, having an interrupter that can vibrate at the rate of 450 times a second. The patient sits in the traditional armchair and takes the negative electrode in his left hand and the positive in the right. At this moment the operator turns on a current whose intensity is gradually increased till it has attained the utmost limit the patient can support. The extractor is then put in circuit and fastened on the tooth, which, under the action of the vibration is loosened at once. The operation is performed very quickly, and the patient feels no other sensation than the pricking produced in the hands and forearms by the passage of the current. It would be interesting to have a detailed description of the apparatus to complete this somewhat brief description.—Nature.

MANY LIVES LOST

BUTTE, MONT., THE SCENE OF AN AWFUL ACCIDENT.

During a Fire in a Warehouse an Explosion of Giant Powder Occurs, Killing a Number of People—While Efforts Are Being Made to Remove the Dead a Second Explosion Occurs, Which Completely Wipes Out the Fire Department

Butte, Jan. 17.—A fire occurred in the Butte Hardware company's warehouse last night in which giant powder was stored. The fire department were at work on the fire when the explosion took place, killing a number of people. While efforts were being made to remove the dead and wounded a second explosion occurred. The entire fire department was wiped out, including the chief and all the horses. Three policemen were among the killed, who number at least seventy-five. Plate glass was broken all over the city, and the damage to property is enormous. The relatives of the killed are frantic and the city is in consternation. The powder in the warehouse was in violation of law. It was the greatest explosion in the history of the West.

Another Account.

Denver, Jan. 17.—A special to the Rocky Mountain News from Butte says: The fire broke out in the Montana Central yards, and soon several cars loaded with powder caught fire. Just as the firemen were closing around the blazing cars an explosion occurred, killing a number of firemen and spectators and maiming many others. The firemen who had escaped immediately rallied and were beginning another attack when a second explosion, more violent than the first, took place. The people in the vicinity were mowed down as with a great scythe, and the streets for half a block around looked like a great battlefield. Debris was thrown high in the air, coming down a half mile away. Many people on the streets in the center of the city were thus injured. A few of the remaining firemen were gathered together and while attempting to escape to a place of safety the third and last explosion occurred. This, too, killed and injured many people. There were several cars of powder and all of them exploded. The whole heavens were lighted up and the city shook as if an earthquake was in progress. Immediately after the first explosion the entire hospital corps and police force were summoned.

Terrific Explosions.

Denver, Jan. 17.—A special to the Republican from Butte says: The fire started in the Royal Milling company's warehouse and spread to the Kenyon, Cornell company warehouse, in which was stored car loads of giant powder. The first explosion was the most terrific and killed every fireman save two belonging to the central station. One of these was standing behind the hose horses and the other was at a water hydrant several hundred feet away. So far between fifty and sixty mangled bodies have been recovered, and more are being picked up on all sides. It is impossible to get names at present. It is estimated that about 100 additional persons are injured, several of whom died after being taken to the hospitals. The scene beggars description. Wagons are still taking dead bodies from the scene of the explosion to various undertaking establishments and the wounded to their homes and hospitals. The latter are all full. The list of dead will possibly reach seventy-five, and the damage to property will be more than a million dollars. In all three car loads of powder exploded, one of which was exploded in the Butte Hardware company's warehouse, which adjoined the Kenyon, Cornell warehouse. Large pieces of iron were thrown for miles. Several bodies were buried a long distance and picked up in unrecognizeable masses of flesh.

Later.

Butte, Mont. Jan. 18.—It is now estimated that the number of persons killed by the terrible explosion of giant powder is sixty.

Nearly fifty are already known to have been killed. To-day the city is in mourning and all flags are at half-mast. The relief meeting called by the mayor was largely attended and committees appointed for the collection of money for the relief of the afflicted families. The people are responding liberally and a sufficient amount to relieve distress is already guaranteed. A number of the bodies are mangled beyond all recognition and never will be identified. The following is the list of the dead identified:

Charles Alson, George McDonald, Charles Guttenberg, Consegue Barnes, George Galbraith, J. J. McHale, Prof. Robinson, John J. Enright, C. B. Tracey, Matt Grosser, Officer Fred Granbeck, James O'Leary, Alfred Goddard, William Pierce, —. Foster, Mike Mead, George Wilton, William Smith (colored), J. B. Miller, Fred Bowman, Mike Deagle, George Halloway, —. Bailey, Alex McWilliams, W. H. Nolan, Charles Hansen, Elmer Green, Ed Sloan, Alex Cady, John Morgan, S. D. Delongery, A. D. Cameron, John Sloane, Samuel Ash, Dave Moses, George Fifer, Peter Morling, William McGee, John Fudge, Ole Olsen.

Prof. Robbins or Robinson, who is also known as "Two Bear," was a famous hunter and a friend of Theodore Roosevelt of New York. He had spent all his life in the mountains and was making preparations to guide a party through a practically unknown portion of the Yellowstone Park. Several visitors in the city are among the dead, among them being J. B. Miller, an Idaho lawyer.

The ruins are still smouldering, and it is believed that more bodies will be found under the acres of debris.

Inquiries are coming from all parts of the country about friends and relatives who reside in the city and who were supposed to have been here at the time of the explosion. It is admitted by all that this is by far the most disastrous surface explosion that has occurred anywhere in the country during recent years.

REPORT OF LEXOW.

It is Presented to the New York State Senate.

Albany, Jan. 10.—The report of the Lexow committee, embodying the results of its protracted investigation of the New York police department, was to-day submitted to the senate. The report states that, while during the first stages of the investigation the difficulty lay mainly in the inability to procure testimony, as the investigation progressed, as public sentiment became more and more aroused and the developments assumed from day to day a more startling aspect, the number of witnesses and the variety of the testimony offered increased prodigously, and the main difficulty finally lay in sifting the good from the mass and rejecting that which is purely cumulative. Upon the second branch of the investigation the committee was especially fortunate in securing the active support and co-operation of many representative organizations, notably the Society for the Prevention of Crime, and its distinguished president, Rev. Charles H. Parkhurst, of the chamber of commerce, represented by Charles Stewart Smith, and of the metropolitan newspapers. Acknowledgment is also made of the service rendered by Mr. Goff.

The report deals somewhat at length with the election fraud developments, in which it was shown that the police invariably acted in the interests of Tammany.

The report states that the material collected by the Rev. Dr. Parkhurst and the city vigilance league was most valuable. While it was impossible for the committee to spend much time in considering police courts, enough is shown upon the records to justify the conclusion that a very important reason why the police have been able to carry on and successfully perpetrate their reprehensible practices is that at least some of the police justices have apparently worked in sympathy and collusion with them. The committee expresses the conviction that the testimony taken conclusively establishes an indictment against the police department of the city of New York as a whole.

The testimony upon the subject of blackmail by disorderly houses, taken as a whole, establishes conclusively the fact that this variety of vice was regularly and systematically licensed by the police.

After reviewing the testimony relative to collusion with gamblers, policy men, green goods men, thieves, professional bondsmen, etc., the report expresses the opinion that there is much more to be learned about the purchase of appointments, and that this evil is largely responsible for the demoralization of the force. The importance of eliminating the influence of political leaders upon the patrolmen is dealt upon.

The recommendations of the committee cover the following points:

The concentration in the hands of a chief of police of all police powers and that of suspending subordinates without pay; the establishment of a bipartisan board of police commissioners with exclusive authority over elections and the judicial functions of the department; promotions on the force in conformity with civil service rules, the examination of the account of the department in the same manner that other departments of municipal government are examined; the organization of the police department by commissioners who shall co-operate with the mayor; and the continuance of the committee of investigation.

Refuse to Arbitrate.

Brooklyn, Jan. 10.—Still the great trolley strike remains unsettled and both the officials of the companies and the strikers claim to be sure of victory. Aside from the breaking of the strike on the De Kalb and Franklin avenue lines of the Brooklyn & Newton Railroad company and the running of a few cars on the Putnam avenue line of the Brooklyn Heights Railroad company the situation is practically unchanged. Presidents Lewis and Norton, of the Brooklyn Heights and the Atlantic avenue roads, respectively, stand firm.

Cullom Chosen.

Springfield, Ill., Jan. 10.—The Republican joint caucus, to elect a senatorial candidate, convened last night. The nomination of Shelby M. Cullom to succeed himself in the United States senate for the next six years had been all but a foregone conclusion for the last twenty-four hours or more, and little remained but to ratify the apparently well established sentiment of the members by a formal roll call. He was nominated on the first ballot.

In Favor of the City.

Split the Century in Three Parts.

And about one and a third of the last of these represents the term of popularity of Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, the most highly sanctioned and widely known remedy in existence for dyspepsia, lack of stamina, liver complaint, constipation, nervousness, incipient rheumatism and inactivity of the kidneys. Neither spurious imitation or underhand competition has affected the sale of this genuine remedy.

Taken In.

"If I live long enough," he said, moodily, "I hope I'll get over being a natural mark for any bunco steerer that happens to be loose."

"What's the matter?"

"I concluded I'd have to economize, so I sent 50 cents to a man who said that was all he'd charge to tell me how to make a little money go a long way."

"And what did he tell you?"

"He simply wrote, 'Send 5 cents by express to San Francisco.'"—Washington Star.

In Olden Times

People overlooked the importance of permanently beneficial effects and were satisfied with transient action; but now that it is generally known that Syrup of Figs will permanently cure habitual constipation, well informed people will not buy other laxatives, which act for a time, but finally injure the system.

$300 FOR A NAME.

This is the sum we hear the Salzer Seed Co. offer for a suitable name for their wonderful new oats. The United States department of agriculture says Salzer's oats is the best of 300 varieties tested. A great many farmers report a test yield of 200 bushels per acre last year, and are sure this can be grown and even more during 1895. One thing we know and that is that Salzer is the largest Farm Seed grower in the world and sells potatoes at $2.50 per barrel. Just the kind that do well in Texas and the great South. Thirty-five packages, earliest vegetables, $1 post paid.

If You Will Cut This Out and Send It with 10c postage to the John A. Salzer Seed Co., LaCrosse, Wis., you get free his mammoth catalogue and a package of above $300 Prize Oats. W. N. U.

MICHIGAN'S BENEFACTOR.

AN OFT REPEATED STORY OF TRUE PHILANTHROPY

What Charles H. Hackley Has Done for Western Michigan.

[From Grand Rapids (Mich.) Evening Press.]

The most beautiful spot in all this city is inseparably associated with the name of Hackley. Chas. H. Hackley has been in the lumber business here continuously since 1856 and in that time has amassed a fortune which gives him a rating among the wealthy men of the nation. But with wealth there did not come that tightening of the purse strings which is generally a marked characteristic of wealthy men.

It is no wonder then that the name of Charles H. Hackley is known at home and abroad. His munificence to Muskegon alone represents an outlay of nearly half a million. For the past twenty years he has been a constant sufferer from neuralgia and rheumatism, also numbness of the lower limbs, so much so that it has seriously interfered with his pleasure in life. For some time past his friends have noticed that he has seemed to grow young again and to have recovered the health which he had in youth.

To a reporter for the News Mr. Hackley explained the secret of this transformation. "I have suffered for over 20 years," he said "with pains in my lower limbs so severely that the only relief I could get at night was by putting cold water compresses on my limbs. I was bothered more at night than in the day time. The neuralgic and rheumatic pains in my limbs, which had been growing in intensity for years, finally became chronic. I made three trips to the Hot Springs with only partial relief and then fell back to my original state. I couldn't sit still and my sufferings began to make life look very blue. Two years ago last September I noticed an account of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People and what they had done for others, and some cases so nearly resembled mine that I was interested, so I wrote to one who had given a testimonial, an eminent professor of music in Canada. The reply I received was even stronger than the printed testimonial and it gave me faith in the medicine.

"I began taking the pills and found them to be all that the professor had told me they would be. It was two or three months before I experienced any perceptible betterment of my condition. My disease was of such long standing that I did not expect speedy recovery and was thankful even to be relieved. I progressed, rapidly, however, toward recovery and for the last six months have felt myself a perfectly well man. I have recommended the pills to many people and am only too glad to assist others to health through the medium of this wonderful medicine. I can not say too much for what it has done for me."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

Ventilation in Winter.

Now the double windows are in, and the furnace is started, you will be obliged to take special pains in order to have plenty of fresh air in the house. Half the dangers of our winters is in our overheated and oxygen-drained houses. We stay in them until we become weakened, and then some sudden exposure, which we should not have minded had we been in our best condition, is too much for us. Give the whole house a thorough airing every morning and do not keep it too hot through the day. Study ventilation. Air is cheap.—Jeuness Miller Monthly.

The Nicaragua Canal.

The project of the Nicaragua canal has been debated in the United States senate very vigorously. One thing should be remembered about that climate, it is death to almost every foreigner who goes there, and laborers especially succumb. It is said that the Panama railroad cost a life for every tie. What an idea of pains and aches is in this sentence! It is mostly due to carelessness. Every laborer provided with St. Jacob's Oil would be armed against these troubles. Men's muscles there are cramped with rheumatic pain, and they ache all over. That's just the condition where this sovereign remedy can do its best work. The fearful malady is very much like the breakbone fever in certain parts of America.

A Gentle Corrective

is what you need when your liver becomes inactive. It's what you get when you take Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets; they're free from the violence and the griping that come with the ordinary pill. The best medical authorities agree that in regulating the bowels mild methods are preferable. For every derangement of the liver, stomach and bowels, these tiny, sugar coated pills are most effective. They go about their work in an easy and natural way, and their good lasts. Once used, they are always in favor. Being composed of the choicest, concentrated vegetable extracts, they cost much more than other pills found in the market, yet from forty to forty-four are put up in each sealed glass vial, as sold through druggists, at the price of the cheaper made pills.

"Pleasant Pellets" cure biliousness, sick and bilious headache, dizziness, costiveness, or constipation, sour stomach, loss of appetite, coated tongue, indigestion, or dyspepsia, windy belchings, "heart-burn," pain and distress after eating, and kindred derangements of the liver, stomach and bowels. Put up in sealed glass vials, therefore always fresh and reliable. Whether as a laxative, or in larger doses, as a gently acting but searching cathartic, these little "Pellets" are unequaled.

As a "dinner pill," to promote digestion, take one each day after dinner. To relieve the distress arising from over-eating, nothing equals one of these little "Pellets." They are tiny, sugar-coated, anti-bilious granules. Any child readily takes them.

Accept no substitute that may be recommended to be "just as good." It may be better for the dealer, because of paying him a better profit, but he is not the one who needs help.

A free sample (4 to 7 doses) on trial is mailed to any address, post-paid, on receipt of name and address on postal card.

TRY IT FOR DYSPEPSIA.

She Said "Her Grace."

An English woman of rank—a duchess—was very apt to forget to pay her bills. A milliner, whose large bill had been repeatedly ignored by the duchess at last determined to send her little girl, a pretty child of ten years, to beg for the money which was so much needed. "Be sure to say 'your grace' to the duchess," said the anxious mother, and the child gravely promised to remember. When, after long waiting, she was ushered into the duchess' presence the little girl dropped a low courtesy, and then folding her hands and closing her eyes she said softly: "For what I am about to receive may the Lord make me truly thankful." As she opened her eyes and turned her wistful gaze on the duchess, that light hearted person flushed very red, and, without delay, made out a check for the amount due to the milliner.

The Fastest Time Ever Made From Chicago to Jacksonville.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

WORK OF THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings in the Senate and House, Comprising a Brief Summary of the Week's Business.

St. Paul, Jan. 23. — The most important bill that was introduced in the senate was that of Senator Stevens, referring to the appointment of an arbitration committee to settle disputes. The bill provides for the appointment by the governor of a state board of three, one an employer, one a member of a labor union and the third an impartial man agreed upon by the first two. The board is to be appointed biennially. It also provides for voluntary arbitration. The state board is empowered to investigate any controversy of difference, either on the complaint of one of the parties concerned, or, if reliably informed of the affair by outside parties. After investigation, its report shall be published and recorded in the district court of the county. If the application to the board for its mediation is from both parties to the dispute its decision shall be binding for six months, or until sixty days after either party has given the other notice of his intention not to be bound by the same. The state board shall encourage the formation of voluntary boards of arbitration between those in dispute, and the same board shall have power to call witnesses, administer oaths, etc. The arbitrators will receive $5 per day and actual expenses whilst at work, and they have to make a biennial report to the legislature.

The bill to appropriate $60,000 for the deficiency of the state university had its final passage, and Senator Day's anti-pooling bill was treated in the same manner.

Representing certain interested parties, who have long desired that historic Fort Snelling should come into the possession of the state, Mr. Gibbs introduced a resolution in the house this morning to that effect, addressed jointly to both houses of congress.

In the house Mr. Knutson introduced a bill to abolish capital punishment. A bill was introduced by Mr. Feig prescribing a uniform rate of charges for telephones, making those rates $4 per month for a phone in a business house and $3 per month in a private residence. The bill of Mr. Gibbs relating to the protection of timber and game animals in the land set aside as the Itasca state park aims to secure that by making the first two offenses punishable by fines of $50 and $200 and the last by imprisonment. Another of the proposed laws, with Mr. Tallman as its sponsor, related to exemption of property under sale or levy of execution or attachment or similar proceeding. By this measure incomes equal to $60 per month for three months preceding the levy or sale is exempt.

St. Paul, Jan. 26.—Gov. Nelson and Lieut. Gov Clough have held a consultation as to when the governor shall step down and out and pass his footwear over to his chief lieutenant, but neither of those directly concerned will give out a hint as to when the change will take place, not even as to whether it may be expected soon or late.

Bills introduced in the senate: Jones, to provide for the destruction of Russian thistle; Ringdahl, to amend section 91, chapter 65, of the General Laws of 1878; Ringdahl, to amend section 84, chapter 65, of the General Laws of 1878; Ringdahl, to amend section 331 of chapter 66 of the General Laws Statutes of 1878; Greer, to appropriate $5,000 for the state camping grounds of Wabasha county; Keller, to appropriate $3,000 for the widow of John C. Hoffman, killed by Indians on Sept. 23, 1863; Lloyd, to amend section 407 of the penal code, relating to receiving deposits in insolvent banks; Hanna, to amend section 1, of chapter 199, of the General Laws of 1893; Morgan, regulating the time and manner of taking exemption to the charge and trial of jury cases; Miller, to amend chapter 1, section 4, of the General Laws of 1893; Theden, to prohibit the sale of intoxicating liquors to minors; Greer, to amend section 13, chapter 10, of the statutes of 1878 on holding annual town meetings; Spencer, to appoint a state mining inspector.

Gov. Nelson sent word to the house that H. F. 68, to legalize certain bonds, had received his signature and had accordingly become a law. Bills introduced: Nelson, to amend section 5, article 9, of the constitution, by allowing the state to construct grain elevators; grain warehouse. Robillard, making liquor licenses non-transferable; temperance. E. E. Smith, to legalize certain conveyances made by heretofore married women; judiciary. Cross, an act for detaching villages from townships; judiciary committee. Leach, an act to amend existing laws relating to an appeal in the matter of laying out new highways; committee on judiciary. Barta (by request), to amend existing laws relating to justices of the peace in constructing grain elevators; grain and warehouse. Swanson, an act to amend existing laws relating to the sale of intoxicating liquors; committee on temperance. Tallman, an act relating to county superintendents of schools; committee on education. Hartshorn, an act to provide $2,000 out of iternal fund of the state to drain swamps and provide certain highways in Todd county; committee on roads and bridges.

St. Paul, Jan. 27.—Toward the close of the session of the senate Lieut. Gov. Clough created a stir by announcing that it would be necessary for the senate to elect a president pro tem at once. This was a straight tip that before the senate meets again, Monday evening, the lieutenant governor will be governor, and Knute Nelson free to assume his duties in the senate at Washington on March 4. A move was made by several senators who are opposed to the election of Senator Day, to postpone the voting but this was not successful. Senator Yale made a motion that the business of election of a president pro tem be made a special business of Tuesday, but this was thwarted again upon it being stated by the president that that date was too late. Upon a vote being taken 36 voted for Senator Frank A. Day of Martin and 12 for Senator Barr of Blue Earth. Mr. Day's election was then made unanimous.

Six financial measures were introduced by Senator Wyman to straighten out the finances of the state in all the departments. Probably the most important of these was a bill appropriating $250,000 to pay the revenue and building bonds of the state now due. There were two bills making appropriations for the payment of the salaries of supreme and district court judges. The fund for this purpose has been short, and there is now a $60,000 deficiency in their salaries. The second was an appropriation of $137,000 to make up the shortage in the appropriation for their future salaries. A third bill in the same line simply orders the state auditor to draw his warrants for the deficiencies in these two bills. Still another transfers the surplus in the school text book fund to the general fund. In relation to the $137,000 additional appropriation for the salaries of the supreme and district court judges, it may be stated that the old law makes an annual appropriation for these salaries, and this has long since become too small, through the increase in the number of district judges, so the legislature has been obliged at every session to pass a deficiency bill. The addition of the $137,000 to the standing appropriation will do away with the necessity for the biennial deficiency appropriations.

Senator Pottgeiser introduced his long looked-for liquor license bill. It is a sort of high license, local option measure, providing that the minimum license shall be $500 in cities of 10,000 or more inhabitants, and providing that the councils of these cities may make the license as much higher as they see fit. It is expressly provided that the bill shall not in any way interfere with the operation of the local option law.

The House.

In the house Representative Staples introduced a series of joint resolutions directly aimed at the taking of timber from mineral lands under mineral leases and contracts, and they were unanimously passed under suspension of the rules. The state has been defrauded of two millions of feet of valuable pine by the machinations of certain cliques of men operating under the law allowing leases and contracts to be made for mineral lands, and the action of the resolutions, if they become law, in immediately stopping the further issuance of such leases in the auditor's office will preserve to Minnesota extensive tracts of pine land yet untouched, but which these operators are now scheming to denude of its forest growth.

Mr. Staples introduced a joint resolution calculated to hold up the mineral leases until the legislature can act upon some of the recommendations of the pine land committee with regard to changes in the laws. The resolution prohibits the auditor from issuing any more permits upon timber or mineral lands until the legislature has disposed of some of these bills which will be introduced shortly.

The only contest in the senate is settled to all intents and purposes, although the final seal will be affixed when the committee's report is presented. The report will recommend that Senator John H. Smith of Detroit be declared entitled to his seat, thus defeating the contestant Randolph M. Probstfield. Mr. Probstfield was the Populist candidate for senator in the Fiftieth district, which includes Wilkin, Clay and Becker counties. There was an exciting election in the district, and Senator Smith won by the small margin of eleven votes.

Bills Introduced.

Two important measures were introduced in the house. One provides for a constitutional amendment relating to the taxation of the product of mines and other property owned by mining companies. The other, which was prepared by the state labor commissioner, seeks to amend the present laws relating to child labor.

The first bill, a proposed constitutional amendment, was introduced by Mr. Parker of Washington county. It proposes to add to section 3, of article 9, of the constitution, the following: "In lieu of other taxation there be a specific tax on the product of all mines, but no such tax shall be construed to prevent taxation of real estate of mine owners not used in the business of mining." This would have to be submitted to the vote of the people at the next general election for adoption or rejection. At the present time the output of the mines on fee lands pays a state tax of 1 per cent per ton. The other lands held by the mining companies, if taxed at all, pay but a small amount into the state treasury.

The child labor bill was introduced by Mr. Lovejoy and contemplates a number of changes in the present law.

Mr. Nieman presented the petition of Anton Le Bonte of Stearns county, who prays for indemnity in the sum of $1,100 for the crops which he lost during the Indian outbreak in the early sixties. Referred to the committee on claims.

Mr. Knuteson presented a petition from citizens of Polk county, asking the members to support Senator Cronkhite's bill for an extension of the drainage in the Red river valley.

The committee on roads and bridges reported, favoring the passage of H. F. No. 61, Gutterson, which abolishes the present system of working out road taxes and requires the collection of the money, which shall be expended under the direction of township supervisors. The report of the committee was adopted, and the bill goes on general orders.

Thirteen Drowned.

New London, Jan. 29. — The ocean tug Sea King of Philadelphia, from New York to Providence, with a tow of five coal laden barges, put into this port and reported the loss of her entire tow and the consequent death of thirteen persons, including three women and two children.

Heavy Loss at Hastings.

Hastings, Minn., Jan. 29.—The sash, door and planing factory of R. C. Libbey & Co. was burned between 2 and 3 o'clock. It is supposed to be the work of an incendiary. The loss is about $12,000; no insurance.

Killed by the Rail.

Dodgeville, Wis., Jan. 29.—Thomas Jones, a Central brakeman, had his head crushed to pieces while making a coupling here. He lived here.

DOINGS OF CONGRESS.

LAST SESSION OF THE FIFTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

A Condensed Record of the Proceedings in the Senate and House—Matters of Importance Dealt With.

Washington, Jan. 23. — The senate again gave its attention to the Hawaiian question, there being added interest in the subject owing to the president's course in dispatching a warship to Hawaii and in making a semi-official announcement of his views. Mr. Lodge added one more to the large number of Hawaiian resolutions already piled upon the presiding officer's desk. It was less critical than those preceding it, and after congratulating the administration on sending a ship to Honolulu, breathed the spirit of annexation and of opposition to any British occupation of Hawaiian soil. Mr. Frye sought to secure action on his resolution, expressing profound regret at the renewed efforts to restore the queen. This brought on a sharp debate in which Mr. Gray upheld the policy of the administration. He was frequently interrupted, and at times the discussion became somewhat personal. Failing to secure a vote, Mr. Frye gave notice that he would keep the Hawaiian question to the front until it was disposed of. He will endeavor to get a vote to-morrow. The rest of the day was devoted mainly to the appropriation bills, the fortification bill carrying $2,000,000, approximately being passed, and the deficiency bill, including the income tax appropriation, being finally agreed to as it came from the conference of the two houses. Mr. Hill made another fruitless effort to amend the income tax provision, his proposition being voted down, 26 to 19. It was determined to close the debate and take a vote on the long pending Nicaraguan canal bill next Friday.

The house, operating under a special order, was enabled to vote on seven public building bills which were considered in committee of the whole Aug. 8, 1894, and they were passed. They authorized the construction of public buildings at Chicago to cost $4,000,000; $200,000 at South Omaha, Neb. The appropriating clause in each bill was stricken out and the appropriations must in future be sundry civil bills.

Washington, Jan. 24.—The policy of the administration as to Hawaii was again the subject of sharp attack and defense in the senate. The personal element in the controversy drew large crowds to the galleries, which at times overflowed into the outer corridors. It indicated little diminution of public interest in Hawaii now that the course of the administration is the main question of discussion. Mr. Gray and Mr. George justified the administration, and Mr. Gray dwelt upon the persistency and vindictiveness with which the president was villified and misrepresented. Mr. Lodge and Mr. Hawley made the critical speeches of the day, the former urging the extent of the British aggression in the Pacific, while Mr. Hawley made pointed comment on the consideration given to Queen Liliuokalani's representatives who visited the state department after the United States had formally recognized the Hawaiian republic. The debate was still in progress when the morning hour expired and the Nicaraguan canal bill was taken up. Mr. Turpie spoke against the measure for three hours, and had not concluded when the senate adjourned.

The Indian appropriation bill, which has been under consideration for five days in the house was finally passed to-day. It carried $6,494,820 when reported, but as passed the total was considerably augmented. One amendment alone (to pay the first installment for the purchase of the Cherokee outlet) carrying $1,666,000. Several unimportant amendments were added to the bill to-day.

Chairman Wilson, of the ways and means committee, today reported to the house the bill to abrogate the discriminating duty of one-tenth of a cent per pound on sugar imported from countries paying a bounty on exports.

Washington, Jan. 25.—The treasury emergency was the main theme before the senate, and for the time being the Hawaiian question was laid aside. Mr. Jones (Dem., Ark.) and Mr. Smith (Dem., N. J.) each presented a most influential element in the majority of the senate, presenting plans for meeting the currency complications. The propositions differ widely, Mr. Smith's providing for a temporary bond issue pending an investigation by a "monetary commission" composed of senators, members of the house and civilians, while Mr. Jones' plan provides for a bond issue and conditional restoration of silver. The two senators urged their respective measures in speeches which received close attention from a well filled senate and crowded galleries. Mr. Turpie concluded his speech against the Nicaraguan canal bill, becoming bitterly personal at the close against Mr. Morgan, author of the bill, and against the measure itself as the consummation of Cheap John, Peter Funk legislation. During the day Mr. Burrows of Michigan made his first appearance in the senate since the Michigan legislature promoted him to the upper branch of congress.

Mr. Dingley (Maine) called the attention of the house to what he termed the utter failure of the Paris tribunal's regulations for the protection of the Alaskan seal herd and to the probability of the complete extinction of the herd unless steps were immediately taken to secure a co-operation of Great Britain for the protection of the seals. The remainder of the day was devoted to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill. Rapid progress was made. Fifty-five pages of the 105 in the bill were disposed of without amendment before adjournment.

Washington, Jan. 26.—The vote on the Nicaragua canal bill will be taken in the senate at 5 o'clock to-morrow afternoon, unless some unexpected parliamentary obstruction is interposed. In view of the speedy culmination of the long debate there was added interest to-day in the speeches and much speculation on the outcome of the long struggle. Mr. White spoke in advocacy of the bill. Mr. Morgan, in charge of the measure, will close the debate to-morrow. Mr. Morgan is confident he has a majority in favor of the bill. There has been no test vote, however, to indicate with certainty what the result will be. There has been vigorous and bitter opposition to the bill, and Mr. Turpie, who has led the opposition, is not yet ready to concede that the bill will pass. Another chapter to the Hawaiian question was added to-day, Mr. Allen (Pop., Neb.) presenting a resolution for annexation, and Mr. George (Dem., Miss.) making a speech supporting the administration's policy.

The house to-day devoted all its time to the consideration of the sundry civil appropriation bill, with such success that at the hour of adjournment it had completed the reading of the bill, except for several controverted paragraphs, which were temporarily passed over. The case of Judge Ricks had an echo in the adoption of an amendment offered by Mr. Ray (Rep., New York) making it unlawful for clerks of United States courts to include in their emoluments fees not earned and due at the time their acts were rendered, and forbidding the allowance of fees not actually earned. The amendment excited no debate.

Washington, Jan. 27.—The bill pledging the faith of the United States to do the construction of the Nicaragua canal, passed the senate by a decisive vote—31 to 21. It was the termination of a debate which has lasted since the present session of congress began. It was, moreover, the first realization in either branch of congress of the vast project so long and vigorously urged for a canal joining the Atlantic and Pacific, with the United States government standing sponsor for the execution of the work. The bill, in brief, directs the issue of $70,000,000 Nicaragua canal bonds. Each of these is to bear the following guarantee: "The United States of America guarantees to the lawful holder of this bond the payment by the Maritime Canal Company of Nicaragua of the principal said bonds and the interest accruing thereon and as it accrues." An additional $30,000,000 of bonds is to be issued without the United States' guarantee. The total hundred million thus issued is to be used in constructing the interoceanic canal. The secretary of the treasury is to have general supervision of the project. A board of fifteen directors is to have immediate charge of the work. Of this board, the president is to designate ten members, no more than two from any one state. The United States is to receive $70,000,000 of canal company stock in return for guaranteeing the bonds, and is to hold a mortgage lien on all the property of the canal company.

The sundry civil bill passed the house in the shortest time, so far as known, on record. It was under consideration but three days. As passed the bill carries $39,125,721. Two propositions, offered respectively by Mr. Sayers and Mr. Coombs, the former's to clothe the secretary of the treasury with power to issue United States bonds of such denominations as he should see fit, instead of as now to reissue them of the same denomination, and the latter's to retire and cancel the gold certificates and make them non-receivable for customs dues after July 1 next, furnished the principal theme of discussion.

Mr. Sayer's proposition was defeated —74 to 87, while that of Mr. Coombs was carried without division.

Washington, Jan. 29. — President Cleveland's policy toward Hawaii was sustained in the senate by a vote of 24 to 22. The resolution was offered by Mr. Vest as an amendment to the previous resolution on the subject by Mr. Allen (Pop., Neb.) and is as follows:

Resolved, That while the people of the United States earnestly sympathize with the efforts to establish republican institutions wherever that effort is made, they reaffirm the policy of noninterference, unless by agreement, with the affairs of other nations, and recognize to the fullest extent the right of every people to adopt and maintain their own form of government, unawed and uninfluenced by foreign dictation. That the administration of President Cleveland in maintaining this policy as to our foreign relations deserves the approval and support of the American people."

The vote was on party lines, with the exception of Mr. Pettigrew (Rep., S. D.), who voted with the Democrats. By a singular coincidence this one vote carried the resolution, as it would have failed on a tie had the vote been on strict party lines. The action practically disposes of the Hawaiian question in the senate, although it is expected to receive attention from time to time on the various pending resolutions criticising the administration. The house entered upon the consideration of the bill to repeal the differential of one-tenth of 1 per cent per pound imposed by the tariff act on sugars imported from bounty-paying countries.

FROM POPE LEO.

An Encyclical to the American Episcopate.

Rome, Jan. 29.—The papal encyclical addressed to the American episcopate was made public here to-day. With regard to the apostolic delegation the pope states that it was instituted with a view to drawing closer together the bonds between the Catholics of America and the Holy See without in any way curtailing the powers of the bishops. The pope urges the American episcopate to put an end to strife, to install the idea of unity and the perpetuity of marriage among the faithful, and to inculcate among the people civil and religious virtues. In particular, the pope calls upon the bishops to turn aside workmen's associations from law-breaking, to teach journalists respect for religion and truth, to reprove those journals which pass the judgment upon episcopal acts, and finally to turn Protestants to Catholicism by charity, by instruction in doctrine and by leading an exemplary life. In conclusion the pope recommends the sending of a mission to the Indians.

NELSON IS SENATOR.

THE GOVERNOR IS ELECTED TO SUCCEED WASHBURN.

Both Houses of the Legislature Meet in Joint Session and Elect Knute Nelson United States Senator.

St. Paul, Jan. 23.—The senatorial struggle is over. On the first joint ballot; by the decisive vote of 102 in a total of 167, Gov. Knute Nelson was elected to serve for the term of six years, beginning March 4 next.

The roll call began at 12:20 and it took very little time to finish it for there were few interruptions. When the roll of senators was finished Nelson had gained nine votes, and he gained steadily and rapidly as the representatives were called. Before the list was fairly begun it became apparent that he would be the choice, and that it would be made on that ballot. This, no doubt, influenced many votes which would have gone to him on the next ballot anyway, and even those who had vainly hoped that something might turn up favorable to one of the other candidates. Nelson gained from all the other candidates. There was no exception to the rule. Four of Comstock's votes went to him during the balloting, and one, Representative McGrath, went to him after the vote was finished. He gained six from McCleary, one from Donnelly, and received eight of the Democratic votes, the other four going to William Mitchell. The Populists cast their thirteen votes for Donnelly, and would have made it the full fourteen if Representative Moore had not been absent on account of sickness. He gained eighteen votes from Washburn and one that went to Lind yesterday, giving him ninety-eight. Four came to him after the ballot, bringing the number up to 102. Representative Dingman of Hennepin county went to Comstock on the ballot; but as soon as it was announced, changed his vote back to Washburn, evidently desiring to be counted in the Washburn column to the last, since there was no hope of electing any one but Nelson. Following is the vote:

Nelson, 102.

Senators—Collester, Currier, Day, French, Fuller, Hanson, Hodge, Iltis, Johnson, A. G., Keller, Knatvold, Lloyd, Ozmun, Peterson, Pottgeiser, Roverud, Sheehan, Smith, Spencer, Sperry, Stebbins, Stevens, Stockton, Swenlugson, Thorpe, Wing, Young—27.

Nelson Talks.

After the vote was announced there were calls for Nelson, and when he appeared with the committee the audience went wild with enthusiasm. Capt. Van Sant introduced the governor and senator-elect with a brief speech, and then the governor addressed the audience, very briefly thanking the members, and promising to show his appreciation of the honor by honest and faithful service. He paid a high compliment to his opponents upon the fairness with which they had conducted the campaign, and also to Senator Washburn's ability and honesty as a senator. Among other things the governor said:

"There are moments in a man's life when even the most eloquent of us can say little, and this is such an occasion to me. You have conferred upon me the highest honors that can be conferred upon one of your citizens. The only way that I can show my appreciation is to serve you honestly and faithfully. As a member of the state legislature I have participated in three elections of United States senators, and I have never seen one in which there was less bitterness than this. My opponents have all conducted their campaigns fairly and as become honorable men. No one has questioned the fact that Senator Washburn has made a good senator, and I have not heard any one say but what Knute Nelson has made a fairly good governor. There is something about a great office that elevates a man, and I hope it may be so with me, so far as my usefulness in this state is concerned."

Consult With Clough.

Gov. Nelson to-day is unable to say when he will resign the governorship of the state. He will first consult with the lieutenant governor before taking any step. His resignation, it is understood, will be made to Lieut. Gov. Clough.

"I have not yet reached that point," said the senator-elect when asked when he would resign. "I am satisfied and pleased with the result. What further could I say? I am thankful to my friends, and entertain a Christian spirit to all that opposed me."

S. M. Dainard felt so good over the senatorial election that he furnished a small hog which was roasted and served last Friday night by Peter Paradis. It was conceded by all that the pig was considerable of a hog and it was eminently proper for the chief dish in a barbecue in celebration of the election of Knute Nelson should be nothing else but a hog.

What sense is there in this talk of an issue of interest bearing bonds to take up the non-interest bearing greenbacks, that are accepted the world over at par and are in fact, our best and most popular paper currency. It seems most absurd to change the portion of the government indebtedness from a non-interest bearing circulation medium to a gold interest bearing bond that will be stored in safety vaults, and the interest coupons regularly presented for payment at the office of the U. S. treasurer.

The people want nothing of the kind this talk all comes from interested bankers who want take the paper currency from the hands of the government and control it themselves, and we believe the people, irrespective of politics, are beginning to see this in its proper light and will call a halt.— Fertile Journal.

It was state in the last campaign that General Becker the Democratic nominee for governor was running in the interest of Knute Nelson. To the faithful belong the spoils of office and Becker has been paid in full for his work.

Albert Lea Standard: It was declared at the meeting of State Farmers Alliance last week that the state prison binding twine factory had brought down the price of twine from 23 to 7 cents, effecting a saving to the farmers of a million and a half of dollars This proves what coöperation among the farmers will do, and the alliance very properly passed a resolution protesting against a proposition which it is said will be made in the legislature to abolish the plant.

The entertainment given in Bjerk's Hall last Friday evening for the school library was a success in every sense of the word. The hall was filled to its utmost capacity and the audience went home feeling that their money was well spent; Those in charge worked hard to make it a success and the result was an entertainment hard to beat After the play a dance was given and quite a number stayed and tripped the light fantastic until the small hours of the morning. After all expenses were paid they turned over to the school treasurer $15. to be used in purchasing books for the library. The entire management of the entertainment was undertaken by John Stranahan and full credit for the success is due to him.

A citizen wants to know what makes one town grow into a city, while others with equally good locations remain villages? It is because, in the one case there are men of energy, who are not afraid to spend their time and money to boom their town. They erect substantial buildings, organize stock companies and establish factories, secure railroads and work for public improvements and use every means in their power to induce people to locate in the place. Wherever they go they tell of the advantages in their locality, they write about them in every letter, they send circulars and newspapers to every acquaintance whom they think could be induced to visit their town and when anyone visits it they show them all the attraction of the place and treat him with such kindness that he falls in love with them and the town at once — ex

Crookston Times: H. E. Ives, the irrepressible heavy weight from St. Hilaire, is in the city today taking his share of fault finding which every business man feels a right to indulge in when talking to a populist about the expensive grand jury now in session. Harry disclaims any accountability in the matter but says that St. Hilaire with its new dam and mills, will beat all the other towns in the county outside of Crookston in a short time.

Asked as to the detail of the work which he is pushing there he says: "We have decided to put in a dam, which will be 237 feet long and which will give a clear head of 12 feet, allowing 80-100 for waste in the race which will be 800 feet long. The overflow will give us 119 acres of boomage facilities and we will have pocket booms enough to sort and store all the logs which can be cut on the reservation during any one year thus leaving the entire river open to the passage of other logs which might be coming down this way.

"I have been out arranging for the purchase of flowage and shall be able to adjust that matter easily and satisfactorily I think. We have assurance of mills of different kinds which will use all power we can furnish and on the whole we feel greatly encouraged with the improvement the town will make as a consequence of this work. I hope to enlist the aid of the Great Northern Company to a certain extent in these improvements, and can assure any one wishing a desirable location for milling interests of any kind that we have in St Hilaire what he wants."

MINNESOTA
STATE NORMAL SCHOOLS.

At WINONA, MANKATO, ST. CLOUD AND MOORHEAD.

These schools are organized for the training of teachers for the public schools of the state.

ORGANIZATION.—Each school comprises two departments—the Normal Department and the training department or model school.

The Normal department embraces:

(a) An elementary course for teachers of rural districts and elementary grades.

(b) An advanced course for teachers of advanced grades.

(c) A professional course for teachers who have completed the required academic work elsewhere.

ADMISSION.—Graduates of high schools and colleges and teachers holding county superintendents, first and second grade certificates are admitted without examination. All others are required to pass an entrance examination.

EXPENSES.—Tuition is free to all who pledge themselves to teach in Minnesota. Text books are furnished at a rental of $3 per year. Provision is made in each school for economical living. The average cost of furnished rooms with board is about $3 per week. The Ladies Home at St. Cloud offers board [illegible] [illegible] room, light and heat [illegible] The new dormitory [illegible] accommodations $3.50 per week.

DIPLOMAS.—By a recent act of the legislature a diploma becomes a state teachers' certificate of the first grade.

The next school year opens at Winona August 31st; at Mankato August 30th; at St. Cloud August 26th; at Moorhead September 4th.

A SIMPLE LESSON IN FINANCE.

The Lamentable Failure of the Single Gold Standard System.

In order to understand the chief defect of the single gold standard system, it is necessary for us to fix our attention upon one leading function of money. The books on monetary science enumerate several leading functions of money, and among these they all class that of serving as a permanent measure and record of obligations. If A. makes a loan to B., we express the transaction by saying that so many dollars are loaned. But, in reality, what is loaned is the amount of commodities that can be bought for those dollars. It is not the dollars we are after, but what we can get for the dollars. The borrower does not use or consume the dollars. He exchanges them for what he uses and consumes, and these commodities which he uses and consumes are what he really borrows. The debt is measured and recorded, in dollars. The main object of such a record is to insure that when the debt comes to be repaid in five or six or ten years the lender will receive back the same amount of commodities as he gave. As a matter of fact, he does, as we know, receive back the same number of dollars. If these dollars represent the same amount of commodities, then the function of money as a continuous measure of obligations has been in that instance justly discharged. If the dollars represent more commodities when they are paid back than when they are loaned, the borrower is cheated; if they represent less, the lender is cheated.

It is in the discharge of this important function of money that the single gold standard system wholly and lamentably fails to do justice. Mr. Balfour, than whom few living men have a clearer conception of the monetary problem, said some time ago in a speech made in England that in regard to this function of measuring and recording obligations the single gold standard had proved itself so bad a system that it would be difficult to devise a worse one. It is not only that gold, from the peculiar way in which it is found and produced, is, as a commodity, subject to more than average fluctuations of value, but also that its use and manipulation as money vastly increase its liability to fluctuate in value relatively to other commodities.

In truth, the purchasing power of gold today is made up of two elements, which are, firstly, the intrinsic value of gold as a commodity, apart from its use as money, and, secondly, the additional value imparted to it by the demand for it as money. This second element in the purchasing power of the money metal is constantly and habitually ignored in the discussions of monetary questions which take place in the daily press. Yet if we try to imagine what would be the effect on the commodity value of gold if its use as money were to absolutely cease we will be able to get some idea of the part played by the demand for gold as money in determining its purchasing power. And when we have once got this idea we shall not be surprised to find that the purchasing power of the yellow metal has been greatly increased by the "scramble for gold" which has been going on since the commercial world adopted the single standard. This utter and lamentable failure of the single gold standard system to do justice as a permanent measure of obligations is the main defect of that system.—Chicago New World (Catholic).

He Does Not Weaken.

In his message to the legislature Governor Waite refers to the panic as follows:

"Denver had a little tighter pinch than other cities because for years its conscienceless real estate speculators had watered values of lands and lots. Bankrupt banks and investment companies owe millions of dollars to widows and orphans and laborers, which money it would have been more honorable to take from the deposits by highway robbery than by the means through which these poor and ignorant people were induced to deposit their earnings in these institutions.

"One of these bogus investment companies, said to represent $8,000,000, after the panic went where the woodbine twineth, and upon judicial sale all of the assets went for less than $100."

The governor recommends a solemn protest against presidential acts of usurpation and describes the use of United States troops as dangerous to the liberties of the people. United States courts are condemned for mimicking British courts of chancery in enlarging the area of contempt. The peroration reads:

"I will not say 'Hail and farewell.' That would be too formal. We go, but we return. We will meet you, gentlemen, in two years at Philippi."

The Industrial Legion.

The meeting of the National Industrial legion will take place with the Reform Press association at Kansas City on Feb. 22.

All recruiting officers holding commissions from headquarters are state officers of every grade. Executive council and one delegate from each legion will be admitted.

We earnestly hope that the utmost energy will be shown in organizing legions. We should have 1,000 new legions before that date. The legions already organized which have not paid dues will confer a great favor on me if they will send as large contributions as possible to pay printing bills and other expenses. I have borne the burden long enough and shall be compelled to lay it down unless this is done. A small sum from each legion will be a great help.

PAUL VANDERVOORT.

Populists Will Contest.

The [illegible] Mississippi Populist candidates for congress at the last election will, it is understood, contest the seats of the seven Democrats declared elected on the ground that the franchise clause of the new constitution disfranchises more than half the citizens of the state.

AN ADDRESS TO POPULISTS.

Sent Out From the Recent Conference of Leaders Held in St. Louis.

The conference of the national committee of the People's Party, with prominent members of the rank and file, held in St. Louis last month, adopted the following address:

The national committee of the People's Party sends greeting to its constituency throughout the United States.

The rapid increase of our vote in every part of the Union and the startling events of the past two years vividly justify both the existence of and necessity for the People's Party. The contention of the party that one of the great needs of this country has been and is an enlarged volume of circulating medium is now practically conceded by all parties and by the government. The gold power and banking interests are insisting through the president and his secretary that the enlarged issue of our money supply shall be given exclusively into the hands of the banks, that silver shall be excluded, all treasury notes retired and that gold alone shall be a legal tender, thus making the monetary question an issue which must be met at once.

Within the present year the corporations grown arrogant because of the vast possessions of wealth and the exercise of unconstitutional powers, have made war upon the people and induced the federal courts to exercise in their interest unusual and arbitrary powers, induced the invasion of the state by federal troops without the request of either the executives of said states or the legislatures thereof and are at this time, through a recreant administration and a truculent congress, attempting to clothe the railroad corporations, by means of a pooling bill, with power to further and more systematically rob, oppress and plunder the people, and having already deprived the people of access to the silver mines of the country as an independent source of money supply are now, in the interest of a banking oligarchy, endeavoring to deprive them of the right to have their government in the exercise of its constitutional power issue the money of the nation and control its volume.

In the opinion of your committee, these events are startling, subversive of the liberties of the citizen and destructive of business and social security, and adhering to the Omaha platform in all its integrity your committee insists upon the restoration of the coinage of gold and silver as it existed prior to 1873—at the ratio of 16 to 1—without regard to the action of any other nation, and that all paper money shall be issued by the general government without the intervention of banks of issue, the same to be a full legal tender.

We also declare our implacable hostility to the further issue of interest bearing bonds.

We denounce the pooling bill as a move toward completing the monopoly of transportation and demand that instead congress proceed to bring the railroads under government ownership.

The power given congress by the constitution "to provide for the calling forth of the militia to execute the laws of the Union, to suppress insurrections, to repel invasions" does not warrant the government in making use of a standing army in aiding monopolies in the oppression of the public and their employees. When free men unsheath the sword it should be to strike for liberty, not for despotism, nor to uphold privileged monopolies in the oppression of the poor.

We ask the people to forget all past political differences and unite with us in the common purpose to rescue the government from the control of monopolists and concentrated wealth, to limit the powers of perpetuation by curtailing their privileges and to secure the rights of free speech, a free press and trial by jury, all rules, regulations and judicial dicta in derogation of either of which are arbitrary, unconstitutional and not to be tolerated by a free people.

We recommend the immediate organization of an educational campaign by the national, state and local committees.

A BALTIMORE POSTAL PLAN.

Place the Sale of Postage Stamps Under the Control of National Bankers.

Our present postal system is entirely at variance with our national banking system, either actual or proposed. I have therefore drawn a plan which will be in harmony with the scheme for furnishing the currency that the American Bankers' association is urging on congress.

My sketch is "somewhat imperfect, but details can be supplied" to suit the bankers after they have conferred about it:

First.—The sale of postage stamps shall be entirely under the control of national bankers.

Second.—The general government shall make the postage stamps and supply them to the bankers on such terms as the bankers shall dictate.

Third.—The bankers may sell or cause to be sold the aforesaid stamps at such times and places, in such quantities and for such prices as shall seem expedient to them.

Fourth.—The bankers shall have the exclusive right of fixing the rate of postage.

Fifth.—In order that the people may feel confidence in their postage stamps the government is to agree to furnish an examiner, auditor and any other servants whenever the bankers wish their services. Furthermore, the government shall redeem all the stamps which got stuck together and perform any other service in its power to make the people feel that "confidence," which is necessary to all business.

Sixth.—Any person who shall object to such a plan, either in writing, printing or speaking, shall be known and designated as an anarchist, crank or lunatic, and unless he or she shall immediately and permanently desist from such objections shall be punished in such manner as shall hereafter be determined and provided.

While the sixth article is not really a part of the postal plan, its wisdom will be obvious when the bankers begin to charge for carrying the mail in proportion to the rates now charged by telegraph companies and to discriminate in favor of large cities and of certain corporations, as they certainly will do. Under these circumstances it will be hard to explain to the people why it was better for them—the government—to go out of the postal business, and stringent laws may be necessary to keep them quietly voting the Democratic and Republican twin tickets.—C. B. Whitehead in Naugatuck (Conn.) Citizen.

The Discredited Oracles.

Final returns show that the Wisconsin Populists cast 25,330 votes this year. In 1892 they cast 9,909. Figures of this sort rather shake one's confidence in the oracle who proclaims loudly that Populism is dead.—Chicago Times.

Populists Will Sweep the South.

Congressman Elect Howard of Alabama delivered an address to a large audience in Faneuil hall, Boston, last week, in which he predicted that the People's Party will carry every southern state in 1896.

Nothing but words of encouragement and determination are heard on all sides. While some good men have fallen, for the time, there have been some good men elected to fill their places. Taken as a whole, the People's Party is the only one that can point with pride to the methods and results of election.—National Watchman.

Default having been made in the payment of the sum of Eight hundred and sixty four dollars which is claimed to be due and is due at the date of this notice upon a certain mortgage duly executed and delivered by Andrew J. Adams and Elsie [illegible] his wife, mortgagors, to the Dakota Investment Company mortgagee, bearing date the 19th day of August 1887 and with a power of sale therein contained duly recorded in the office of the register of deeds in and for the county of Polk and state of Minnesota on the 21st day of August 1887 at 3:25 o'clock p. m., in book [illegible] of mortgages on page 70 and no action or proceeding having been instituted at law or otherwise, to recover the debt secured by said mortgage or any part thereof.

Notice is hereby given, that by virtue of the power of sale contained in said mortgage and pursuant to the statute in such case made and provided, the said mortgage will be foreclosed by a sale of the premises described in and conveyed by said mortgage, viz:

The south west quarter of Section twenty-two in township one hundred and fifty-one of range forty-seven in Polk county and state of Minnesota, with the hereditaments and appurtenances; which sale will be made by the sheriff of said Polk county at the front door of the court house in the city of Crookston in said county and state on the 16th day of February 1895 at 10 o'clock a. m. of that day at public vendue, to the highest bidder for cash to pay said debt, and interest, and taxes, if any, on said premises, and fifty dollars attorney's fees, as stipulated in and by said mortgage in case of foreclosure, and the disbursements allowed by law; subject to redemption at any time within one year from the day of sale as provided by law.

Dated December 1st A. D. 1894.

Paris Fad for Cooking.

The latest excitement in Paris society is the pursuit of cooking as an accomplishment. Cooking soirees are frequent, and it goes without saying that the art attains greater excellence among the French belles than it ever has when countenanced by English or American dames of high degree. French women are born cooks; their present caprice, merely, demonstrates that this hereditary instinct is not confined to any one class. At a recent reception at the splendid home of a princess, a refreshment bar was fitted up in the drawing room, at which the guests were supplied with warm dishes, broiled, roasted and sauted on elegant cook stoves by very aristocratic young women. The men it is said, could not eat enough in their anxiety to show their appreciation of the novel institution and its charming promoters.—New York Ledger.

Hints to Those Who Carry Umbrellas.

An electric expert says: "I have a word of advice to give people who carry steel-rod umbrellas on wet days. They must keep a sharp lookout for arc lights while pushing their steel rods through the air. Of course this only applies when the current is on, and when it is, if the umbrella rod comes in contact with the lamp, there is a strong probability that the holder will be very badly shocked if not seriously injured.—New York Tribune.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

Doctored Cognac.

In a thoughtful pamphlet just issued by Dr. Salomon, "Sur l' Alcool et la Depopulation de la France," I find a recipe for a mixture which, added to any kind of eau-de-vie, will impart to it the bouquet of cognac. Take a mixture of castor oil, butter, cocoanut oil, and other fats and allow nitric acid to act on it. The product is a mixture of propylic, butylic, amylic, pelargonic, acetic, caprylic, oenanthylic, capronic and valerianic acids. Etherifying it by the addition of methyl, ethyl and amyl alcohols, and a product is yielded from 100 to 130 grammes of which will convert a pipe of 100 hectolitres of eau-de-vie into cognac. One centigramme of this cognacogen injected subcutaneously kills a large dog in ten minutes. One can not help smiling sadly when one remembers that thousands of individuals pay up to a franc for a small glassful of this poison, declaring as they sip it that nothing equals a drop of good fine champagne, as the stuff is called, for helping a sluggish digestion after a generous dinner. There is sure "death in the pot."—Paris Correspondence of the London Lancet.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

THE HAYWARD TRIAL

THE GING MURDER TRIAL ON AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Great Difficulty in Getting a Jury—Harry Hayward Appears in Court As Unconcerned as Usual—Miss Ging's Sister Present.

Minneapolis, Jan. 24.—The immense attendance at the Hayward trial proceedings to-day indicated plainly an intense public interest in this case. The sensational incidents of the day consisted in an effort by a pretty but too susceptible damsel to shower floral favors on the accused, and in the arraignment of certain newspapers by Erwin. The examination went on all day—an incessant routine of challenging and releasing jurors. The three men who had been selected up to the present writing, Messrs. Newell, Webb and Philbrick, are kept under a close watch by Deputy Johnson.

Minneapolis, Jan. 25.—Up to 3:30 three additional jurors had been secured in the Hayward case. They were John Smith, of 1287 East Franklin avenue, the tenth man called during the day; H. B. Timberlake, the insurance man, who was the twenty-third man examined, and Charles Huff of Robbinsdale. The personnel of the jury up to date is an unusually good one, and the jurors selected seem especially fair and impartial men. Twenty-five men were examined.

Adry Hayward made a statement last night to the attorneys for the defense in the case against Harry Hayward that, metaphorically speaking, knocked these gentlemen all in a heap. Late yesterday afternoon Erwin presented an order of the court on County Attorney Nye to produce Adry Hayward at his request. Adry was brought over from St. Paul during the afternoon and held in readiness for an interview with Messrs. Erwin and Smith until court adjourned. Mr. Erwin is, of course, very close mouthed as to the impression made upon him by Adry's statement. Both attorneys for the state are satisfied that they have strengthened the state's case by submitting without protest to the interview demanded on behalf of the defense. Adry's story was the same essentially as that told the authorities, but in detail it was more complete.

Minneapolis, Jan. 26.—There were several interesting incidents prior to the opening of the Hayward case this morning. Judge Smith took exception to the statement in the morning papers that he had issued an order for Adry Hayward's appearance before the attorneys for the defense. Judge Smith pointed out that no such order was necessary, and he objected to the statement that such had been issued. The crowd this morning was fully as large as on any previous day. Probably about fifty women were present in the court room. Three jurors were accepted, making eight the total number now selected. The new men are John Kimball, a farmer, from Champlin; Neil McNeil, living at Dayton, and also a farmer; and B. F. Dickey, a millwright and electrician, living in the city.

Minneapolis, Jan. 27.—Nine jurors have thus far been secured in the Ging murder case.

Minneapolis, Jan. 29.—Nine men have proved acceptable for jurors in the Hayward case as the result of five and one-half days' work. They are Lindsay Webb, C. S. Philbrick, John Smith, E. H. Timberlake, John Kimball, Neil McNeil, B. F. Dickey, Charles Pribble and John Denney, and in the opinion of the attorneys they are exceptionally good men. How long it will take to secure the balance of the jury is a matter for speculation. The defense has eight peremptories left and the state three.

"FOR A CONSIDERATION."

A Little Whirl in the Senatorial Struggle at Olympia.

Olympia, Wash., Jan. 29.—There was intense excitement in the senate when Sergeant of Pierce rose to a question of privilege and demanded of Senator E. W. Taylor an explanation of an article in the Tacoma Ledger over his signature, which Sergeant read, to intimate that Senators Foos, Campbell and himself were supporting Ankeny for a consideration. Sergeant's excitement was at times beyond his control, and he told Taylor that if he impugned the motives of himself and his colleagues for voting for Ankeny he was a contemptible liar. Taylor explained that he referred to the lobby of Pierce county men who came over to coerce him (Taylor) to vote for Ankeny. Sergeant accepted the apology. The following was the vote on the fifteenth ballot: Ankeny, 23; Wilson, 18; Allen, 17; McMillan, 8; Wallace, 5; Turner, 10; Rodgers, 23; C. H. Warner, 1; Manning, 1. One hundred votes cast; necessary to a choice, 51.

TURNS OUT A FAKE.

Ex-Treasurer Taylor Is Still Out of Sight.

Crawfordsville, Ind., Jan. 29.—The sensational locating of Treasurer Taylor of South Dakota, by John G. Overton, ended in wind. Overton took Marshal Grimes clear to Rensselaer to get Taylor at the home of his brother-in-law, Tom McCoy. Taylor was not there. On account of his supposed high intelligence and prominence, hundreds of people in and about Crawfordsville really believed Overton's claim. What induced him to believe as he did cannot be imagined, although some have been unkind enough to insinuate that he received spiritualistic advice.

Quartet of Robbers.

Minneapolis, Jan. 29.—Four highwaymen entered the Gem restaurant, 522 Hennepin avenue, about 2:30 this morning, and at the point of revolvers compelled Johnny Fitzgerald, the proprietor's son, to give up what money was in the money drawer, $11 in silver. Officers Little and George Johnson rounded up two of the quartet at Hennepin avenue and Third street and escorted them to the central police station, where a charge of highway robbery was entered against them. One is John Hill, recently released from the St. Cloud reformatory.

REV. FR. ROSEN DID IT

A MINNESOTA PRIEST'S PART IN THE ANTI-SECRET EDICT.

The Papal Decision to Ban the Odd Fellows, Knights of Pythias and Good Templars Was Reached at the Instance of the Minnesota Priest.

Fairfax, Minn., Jan. 29.—Rev. Father Peter Rosen, who has just returned from his trip to Europe, was seen today by a correspondent. The reverend gentleman looked well, but was rather unwilling to submit to an interview. When asked if he was the German priest of which mention had been made in the papers in regard to the recent decree from Rome against secret societies, he replied:

"I am an American citizen, and traveled in Europe as such. I am, however, a German in the same sense as Archbishop Ireland may be called an Irishman or Mgr. Satolli a Frenchman."

"What caused your name to be brought in connection with this matter?" the reporter asked, "and what about the extent of the decree?"

"As to the decree itself I have nothing to say except that Rome has spoken, and the case is ended. But as to my connection therewith you may say this: It is almost ten years since I was confronted with the question as to whether a man could consistently be a Catholic and at the same time a member of the Odd Fellows or Knights of Pythias. Careful perusal of the rituals convinced me that these societies were religious bodies. In 1884 I wrote to the authorities at Rome, and received a reply that the matter would be considered at the forthcoming plenary council at Baltimore. That council renewed some decrees of the second plenary council and added some new paragraphs in regard to the secret societies. But the practice remained about the same in many instances as before—the decrees of the council remained a dead letter. Not only that, but some church dignitaries curtailed the meaning of the decrees to such an extent that the opinion gained ground that the Catholic church objected only to the Free Masons, and that a Catholic was free to join any of the so-called secret societies. Among the benevolent societies which claimed to be Catholic difficulties arose as to whether a member of these secret societies could also be a member of a Catholic benevolent society. The German Catholic Central Verein at its annual conference, held in Dubuque in 1892, passed a resolution to ask the archbishops of the United States for a final decision. In 1893 at the annual conference in St. Louis I caused a debate on the question, and the St. Louis, and other papers commented on the same. No final action or plan of action was agreed upon except that each local society should act in accordance with the laws of the church as laid down in the third plenary council.

His Proposition to the Pope.

"At the annual conference of the German Catholic Mutual Benefit Association of Minnesota, held in St. Cloud in October, 1893, I caused a resolution to be adopted forbidding any loyal Catholic society to accept as member a person who belonged to a secret society. This increased the difficulty, and thus it is easily explained why I when at Rome should go to headquarters and see how matters stood. The question had been under consideration for over two years at Rome. The proposition I submitted to the holy father reads thus:

"'Most Holy Father: Peter Rosen, a priest of the diocese of St. Paul, Minn., U. S. A., kneeling at the feet of your holiness, in all humility, takes the liberty to submit the following: In many dioceses of the United States of North America exist clandestine societies whose members take a solemn oath that they will at no time and to no one reveal anything in regard to the doings, rituals and members of their lodges. There are especially three societies similar in purpose, viz.: Good Templars, Odd Fellows and Knights of Pythias. These societies, as they commence their meetings with prayers and apparently promote temperance and charity toward their neighbor, are judged differently by the church authorities. In some places pastors give absolution to members who present themselves for the reception of the sacraments without asking withdrawal from said societies, whereas in other places absolution is most positively refused. Now in order that an end may be obtained in these difficulties in a matter of conscience, the undersigned hands herewith to your holiness the rituals of the above-mentioned three societies and begs leave to give a short synopsis of their contents.

"'First—As to the society called Good Templars. The end of said society seems to be praiseworthy, but I refer to their ritual. On pages 12, 14, 19, 21, 23, 24, 35 and 36 are found prayers, hymns and extracts from Holy Scriptures. On page 65 is a funeral ceremony opposed to the Catholic spirit.

"'The other clandestine society called the Odd Fellows has two grades, each of which has three degrees. The three degrees of the lower grade, symbolized by are: Friendship, brotherly love, truth. As to friendship: The friendship existing between David and Jonathan is held up as the model. As to brotherly love: The good Samaritan is held up as the model to be imitated, and charity is to be learned only from the lodge. As to truth: The presiding officer in this grade is called high priest and the degree itself that of the priestly order. As to the degrees of the higher grade: They are of the patriarchal degree, the degree of the "Golden Rule," the possessor of royal purple. The ceremonies in these degrees are based upon the doings of Abraham with Isaac and on imaginary symbols. The Odd Fellows have a Bible at their meetings, and make use of prayers and religious hymns.

"'As to the Knights of Pythias: Their work and doings are based upon the (mythical or) allegorical and symbolical friendship which united Damon and Pythias, one of which was ready to sacrifice his life, as a pledge of friendship, for the other. To the imitation of this example the members are exhorted in such strong language that it is evident that not Christ and his precept ought to influence the members in doing good, but Damon, Pythias and Dyonisius ought to be the models. Meetings of this society are opened and closed with prayers, hymns of a religious character are sung, the Bible is used and altars.

"'Having called attention to these facts, the undersigned most humbly asks that your holiness deign to decide whether these societies can be joined by Catholics and their members receive absolution or not?'

"So far the petition. The decision, as promulgated by the holy see, settles the case forever, and each and every good Catholic is glad that the lines are drawn and the decrees of the third plenary council upheld. Now all I care further to say is that the decree itself and its execution is a matter which concerns the church alone and not outsiders. Surely the church has a right to decide who shall and who shall not be her members, and in doing so uses only an inherent right. She deals with her children and not with outsiders in matters of faith and discipline."

THE GREAT STRIKE.

VIOLENCE AND BLOODSHED AT BROOKLYN.

The Street Car Strike at Brooklyn Still Continues but is Nearing an End—Many of the Companies are Running Cars.

Brooklyn, Jan. 25.—There is a greater public confidence in the maintenance of public order to-day than on any day since the strike commenced. The city is about free from the vague terrorism of nameless deeds by mobs which kept the public mind at a high tension and served to increase the danger of serious collisions and outbreaks. The mere rowdyism which is looking for trouble and wants to destroy property from wantonness, has been pretty well suppressed. It has been demonstrated to those characters that the militia will shoot to kill if necessary to suppress lawlessness.

Another abortive attempt was made in behalf of the strikers to-day to induce the trolley officials to agree to submit to arbitration. The proposition which was submitted to President Norton, of the Atlantic avenue company, was flatly refused by him. The refusal indicates that the companies feel no abatement of confidence that they will win the fight. The success which the Atlantic avenue company has met with in its efforts to operate its lines undoubtedly had its influence upon President Norton in this matter. That the strikers made the overture, after having been several times repulsed in the same quarter, may be regarded as indicating that they have lost some confidence and are anxious for peace. Indeed it is alleged that for three days the highest hope has been that they might be able to extort from the companies the concession that those who abandoned their cars ten days ago should be reinstated and the new hands be discharged.

The fact that the Thirteenth regiment was to-day retired from active duty is believed to indicate the beginning of the end.

Thomas Carney was shot in the side by a soldier of the Thirty-third regiment to-day. Carney had thrown a number of bricks from the roof of a building at several soldiers below. He will probably die.

Henry Ahns, who was shot by the militia last night, died at St. Mary's hospital to-day.

Brooklyn, Jan. 26.—At 11 o'clock the police on duty at Twenty-fifth street and Third avenue had a lively time in putting an end to a riot which had broken out there. About 700 persons collected at this point and jeered the soldiers who were under arms there. The mob continued increasing until noon, when a stone was hurled by one of the crowd, striking a policeman. This was followed by several others, and then the police and militia charged the crowd. The mob rushed along the avenue and into the side streets. Many of them received bayonet thrusts from the militiamen, while the clubs of the police were used with telling effect on the heads of the rioters. The police arrested John Tighe, Charles Burke and Stephen Gannon. While conveying them to the station the crowd attacked them and endeavored to rescue the prisoners. After a desperate conflict, during which more stones were thrown and blows struck on both sides, the three prisoners were locked up.

At Twentieth street and Ninth avenue the strikers during last night cut down the feed wires, return wires and support wires as far as Flatbush avenue, a distance of over a mile. The feed wire on Twentieth street between Seventh and Eighth avenues was also destroyed. The wires at Fifteenth street and Second avenue were cut down early in the morning. A number of trolley cars stored at Ninth avenue near Greenwood cemetery were wrecked and rendered totally unfit for use. The most serious attempt to prevent the running of cars over the Third avenue line was made at Sixty-fifth street and Third avenue, where a plot to burn out the dynamos in the depot was nearly successful. It was evidently the work of skilled electricians.

Justice Gaynor, of the supreme court, handed down his decision today on the application of Joseph Loader for a mandamus to compel the Brooklyn Heights railroad to operate its cars in sufficient numbers to accommodate the traveling public on the Fulton street, Putnam avenue, Greene and Gates and the Tompkins avenue lines. He signifies his intention of granting a mandamus, the form to be determined on the argument of the counsel in court to-morrow.

Brooklyn, Jan. 27.—There is no change in the street car strike. Both sides express confidence. A dozen men are said to have applied for reinstatement to-day, but on the other hand the strikers claim that they are inducing new men to leave as fast as they arrive.

A dynamite cartridge exploded in front of 476 Myrtle avenue. Many windows were broken but nobody was injured. What is supposed to be a dynamite cartridge was picked up this morning by a man who brought it to the First precinct station. The man said he found it at the corner of Flatbush avenue and Fulton street, one of the business stations of the city and where several car lines pass. The object was found on the car track. It is covered with a coating of tar, has a fuse at one end and is about five inches long. The police immediately brought it to Police Superintendent Campbell, who decided to send it to the navy yard, where an examination will be made.

There were many fights between the police and strikers, but no one was seriously injured.

"This is the most encouraging day we have had during the strike," said Master Workman Thomas Murray to the Associated Press reporter as he entered the strikers' headquarters. "If you will sit down here for a while I will show you why we are so much encouraged. We are getting the new men away from the railroad company as fast as they arrive. This morning we induced twenty new men to leave their posts at Ridgewood, and so far to-day we have rescued thirty men at the other end of the line, to say nothing of the number we stopped before they reached this side of the river from New York. We have done all this, remember, without any violence or intimidation, and the new comers have in every case yielded willingly. We bring them to our headquarters, warm and feed them and furnish a ticket to return home, no matter how far away they may live. They have been deceived in coming here. They claim they knew nothing of the strike, but after getting to Brooklyn they are compelled to earn enough to get back. Some of them forfeit what money the company owes them and are glad to get off as easily as that."

It Nears an End.

Brooklyn, Jan. 29.—Were it not for the scarcity of cars one would not have thought that one of the biggest strikes in the history of Brooklyn was in progress. Enormous crowds took possession of the cars. Otherwise there was perfect calm. Large crowds assembled around the depots where military guards are stationed, but there was no violence there, and the bantering the troops received was of a good natured kind.

Those in position to draw conclusions from facts and draw conclusions without prejudice, say that the strike is about ended. The companies seem to be in a position to run their cars. They are not skillfully operated, and throughout the day there were many collisions and there was much bumping together, but there was no accident of a serious nature.

The number of cars operated was slightly over the number operated yesterday. Some were without some of their windows and others running with dissipated looking motor boxes and badly twisted dashboards, but most of them were carrying passengers without molestation. The companies did not venture to open any new lines, nor did they seek to run their cross-town lines of cars through the Erie basin district. Many of the inhabitants of that locality are of a turbulent character, and would, the police say, do mischief, if only for the sake of making trouble. The railroad companies have now become able to operate their lines after dusk, and will, if no serious disturbances are made in the future, soon be running them all night, as they did before the strike began.

The quietness of the strike has been brought about by the strike leaders who have pointed out to the men the folly of a riotous course. They explained that the state could supply two militiamen for each striker if they were needed, and that mob rule would soon be overthrown by bullets and bayonets. The men heard and understood the requests of the leaders and followed them out.

Starvation already confronts many of the families of the strikers. The men were not well equipped financially when they decided to stop work, and the bulk of their funds have been used for the transportation of non-union men to cities from whence they came to replace the strikers. This alone has cost the strikers many thousands of dollars.

A serious setback was received by the strikers when Judge Gaynor, in the supreme court, in the matter of an application for a mandamus against the railroad companies allowed the companies twenty days in which to file an answer.

FIX UP THE CURRENCY.

Advises Senator Hill in a Speech in New York.

New York, Jan. 29.—The Democratic club was filled with many prominent Democrats to enjoy a dinner and hear, among other speakers, Senator David B. Hill. President John Fox presided, and introduced Senator Hill, who said:

"The country is now confronted with a steadily growing deficit in the treasury, occasioned by a failure of the recent fiscal legislation to produce the necessary revenues for the needs of the government. It is hoped that this difficulty will prove temporary. But what is to be done in the interim? How is the credit of the government to be maintained and its liabilities liquidated? The spectacle should no longer be presented of a Democratic administration appealing to a Democratic congress for necessary legislation to secure funds to carry on the government during a temporary emergency, and that appeal made in vain. Why should we put unnecessary obstacles in the way of our successful administration of the government, or wait, falter, haggle or do nothing, and turn over a Democratic administration to the tender mercies of an incoming Republican congress for relief? Such a course from a party standpoint is suicidal, demoralizing, unpatriotic."

FATAL FIRE.

Two Lives Lost in a Fire in an Ohio Town.

Elmore, Ohio, Jan. 29.—A fire that was started by a gasoline explosion in the kitchen of the American hotel destroyed the principal part of the business portion of this town, and at least two lives have been lost. A strong wind was blowing at the time the fire started and the hotel was soon a mass of flames. Two girls, employed in the hotel, Maggie Flynn and Mary O'Malley, were hemmed in by the flames and were forced to jump from a second story window. Miss O'Malley was fatally burned. Miss Flynn was seriously hurt, and it is believed she will die. Besides the American hotel the following buildings were burned: The Elmore house, Johnson & Co.'s hardware store, Frank Smith's clothing store, William P. Van Dorn's grocery, Isaac Mendelbaum's dry goods store, Jacob Kaiser's meat market, the postoffice, three dwellings and a barber shop. Most of the mail from the postoffice was saved, and the merchants succeeded in rescuing a large part of their goods. The fire is not yet under control. An engine has been sent from Toledo and is now at work. It is impossible to learn the loss and insurance.

Many Men Idle.

Wilkesbarre, Pa., Jan. 29.—All the collieries of the Lehigh and Wilkesbarre Coal company will be idle during the coming week. Eight thousand men will be without employment.

Wanted in Philadelphia.

Denver, Jan. 29.—H. Semple has been arrested in this city on a telegram from Philadelphia saying he is wanted in that city for forgery and the embezzlement of $1,500.

Condition of Trade.

New York, Special.—Bradstreet's Review says: Special telegraphic and mail advices from the more important distributing centers fail to relate any marked improvement in the movement of merchandise and products, and the conclusion is forced that the great trade situation remains as previously, characterized by small volume, low prices, hand-to-mouth sales and the outlook favoring a very conservative trade for some time to come.

More Wreckage Found.

Benton Harbor, Mich., Special.—Finding of more wreckage of the Chicora is reported from South Haven. The clerk's office door and one of the Chicora's boats, also much more wreckage of her cabin are reported found.

Destroyed by Fire.

Indianapolis, Special.—The fertilizer plant of Erauh & Sons, near this city, was totally destroyed by fire last night. Loss, $50,000; no insurance.

Rheumatic Pains

Return when the colder weather comes. They are caused by lactic acid in the blood, which frequently settles in the joints. This poisonous taint must be removed. Hood's Sarsaparilla conquers rheumatism because it drives out of the blood every form of impurity. It makes pure, rich blood.

Hair Powdered With Diamond Dust.

A peculiar mode of hair dressing is in vogue among ladies of certain wealthy Jewish families. The coiffure is dressed very high and liberally powdered with diamond dust. At a dinner party given recently by a banker three ladies had their hair treated in this manner. The white powder had turned their hair, naturally black, to a grayish white, forming a striking contrast with their youthful features and black eyes. To complete the resemblance of the fashion of other days each lady had a speck of black court plaster on her face.—New York Sun.

How It May Happen.

"Jeminy crickets, she's got the rickets," whispered one beau to another in the company of a pretty girl. Truly she was very beautiful, but there was a twitching about the nerves of the face which showed suffering. "No," said the other, "it's neuralgia and she's a martyr to it." St. Jacobs Oil was suggested as the world renowned cure for it. Did she try it? Yes, and was cured by it and—married "one of the fellows" afterwards. The use of the great remedy for pain will not bring about a marriage, but in its cure of pain it will bring about conditions of health to make life more enjoyable. No man or woman ought to marry who is a sufferer from chronic pains. We should not wed woe to win only wretchedness.

A Record Breaker.

Stacy—What's making the greatest stir in club life just now?

Marlowe—The cocktail spoon.

An Indianapolis Sentinel man estimates that a regular writer for a daily paper writes $40,000 words a year on an average.

GOLDEN MEDICAL DISCOVERY

Many years ago Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, Buffalo, N. Y., compounded this medicine of vegetable ingredients which had an especial effect upon the stomach and liver, rousing the organs to healthful activity as well as purifying and enriching the blood. By such means the stomach and the nerves are supplied with pure blood; they will not do duty without it any more than a locomotive can run without coal. You can not get a lasting cure of Dyspepsia, or Indigestion, by taking artificially digested foods or pepsin—the stomach must do its own work in its own way. Do not put your nerves to sleep with so-called celery mixtures, it is better to go to the seat of the difficulty and feed the nerve cells on the food they require. Dyspepsia, Indigestion, Biliousness and Nervous Affections, such as sleeplessness and weak, nervous feelings are completely cured, by the "Discovery." It puts on healthy flesh, brings refreshing sleep and invigorates the whole system.

Mrs. K. Henke, of No. 896 North Halsted St., Chicago, Ill., writes: "I regard my improvement as simply wonderful. Since taking Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in connection with his 'Pleasant Pellets' I have gained in every respect, particularly in flesh and strength. My liver was dreadfully enlarged and I suffered greatly from dyspepsia. No physician could give relief.

Now, after two months I am entirely relieved of my disease. My appetite is excellent; food well digested; bowels regular and sleep much improved."

STATE LEGISLATURE.

WORK OF THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings in the Senate and House, Comprising a Brief Summary of the Week's Business.

St. Paul, Jan. 30.—Twenty-six commissions were made out and signed by Gov. Nelson, many of them being reappointments to state offices and boards. There are several appointments which have not yet been made. The session of the senate brought six bills to light, three of them being of some general interest. Senator Ozmun's bill, S. F. No. 125, will interest all inhabitants of cities who desire to see different methods introduced in the management of municipal and county politics. Senator Greer's bill providing for the establishment of three district appellate courts to relieve the supreme court of a number of minor cases will interest the lawyers. And Senator Thorp's bill introducing into Minnesota the Massachusetts law requiring all bar rooms to take down their screens, curtains, etc., and to expose the interior of saloons to full view from the sidewalks will interest frequenters of such places, and the curious who have long wished to know what was transpiring behind the brilliant hued obstructions to sight to be found behind the windows of every place where liquid refreshments are dispensed. Incidentally this bill, should it become a law, will put an effectual stop to selling liquor on Sunday and many of the other customs of saloons.

Senator Ozmun's new bill to regulate city and county elections promises to effect a revolution in municipal affairs by enabling the voters to select in fact their public servants instead of in theory, as under the present arrangement, where a few active men in each ward or precinct control the delegates to party conventions and there place in nomination men who are not the real choice of the people. Thus leaving to the individual voter nothing but a choice of evils, because neither opposing candidate is, in his opinion, the best qualified for the office sought. In other words, the object of the bill is to give the people some voice in selecting their representatives without compelling them to devote a large part of their time to anti-primary agitation.

In the House.

There was a small attendance in the house, and but little business. After five bills had been introduced the house took a recess until 11 o'clock, when Senator Frank Day's anti-railroad pooling resolution, which had been made a special order for that time, was taken up and it was passed unanimously.

Mr. Tallman introduced the amendment to the union label law of 1893, advocated by the labor unions. The bill is intended to remedy the defects in the law preventing the imitation of union labels by making it apply to dealers who handle goods with fraudulent labels as well as manufacturers, who attach these labels to goods. The law of 1893 was found to be inoperative, because it applied only to manufacturers, and it was often found impossible to reach them.

St. Jaul, Jan. 31.—The new capitol bill was introduced in the house and senate. The bill does not make many changes over the bill of two years ago, but does arrange matters so that there can be some progress in the work of construction during the next two years.

Senator Sperry's bill makes it the duty of all county officers to report to the county auditor a statement of all fees, enrollments, etc., received in connection with their offices.

Senator Spencer's insurance bill provides for the payment of the full amount for which a building is insured, where there is a total loss. It is a bill that comes up every year, and is calculated to arouse considerable opposition on the part of insurance companies.

Senator Jones' fence bill is another bill intended to wipe the Russian Thistle off the earth. He would keep out the thistle by means of a fence.

Senator Thorpe introduced a bill extending the privileges of the high school board examinations to the country districts, and under the supervision of the county superintendents. Another bill by Thorpe defines the duties of county superintendents in examining applicants for teachers. It specifies the branches they are to be examined in, and establishes the grades and duration of the certificates. A board of arbitrators is also provided for.

Senator Stebbins' bill abolishes the inebriate department at the Rochester insane asylum.

Senator Heneman's election bill is intended to head off the independent running. Men can run for state offices by getting petitions from 1 per cent of the voters; for district offices, 5 per cent; for county and municipal offices, 10 per cent of the voters.

In the House.

For the first time this session the house took up general orders in committee of the whole. The proceeding savored greatly of an expreiment, and was more for the purpose of initiating inexperienced statesmen into the mysteries of the lawmaking craft than to meet any pressing need of business. Henry Feig was the chairman called to preside by Speaker Van Sant, and his skilled guidance conducted the neophytes safely over the shoals of parliamentary tactics. Three important bills, relating to claims of Aitkin county commissioners, wolf bounties and the aiming of firearms, were considered in the committee and recommended to pass. The fourth on the docket, by which relief associations of firemen are organized in small cities and towns, occasioned a debate between Mr. Jacobson and Johns, its author, with the result that the committee decided to report progress, but nothing further. Jacobson's argument on the bill brought forth the fact that state funds, after once appropriated to the relief association, even though they were under state supervision, were not under state control, and this was the real reason for the decision to consider the measure more at length. On rising, the committee of the whole reported on the bills as they had determined in committee, and the house accepted the report.

Resolutions were introduced into the house this morning proposing investigations into the rate discriminations of the railroads of the state; also into the charges of expresses companies.

In the house Representative Dare, of Sherburne county, introduced a drastic bill to regulate sleeping car charges in this state, and also to compel these companies to care for the property of passengers.

The bill fixes the maximum rate for sleeping car transportation at a half-cent per mile for lower berths, and one-third of a cent per mile for upper berths. The maximum rate for parlor, boudoir and drawing room cars is fixed at one-half of a cent per mile for a single seat, while the seat is in use.

The bill even prohibits the companies from allowing the porters on these cars from accepting tips. Finally, the company is not allowed to drop the upper berth in sleeping cars, except when occupied by passengers. The penalty for violation of these later provisions is the same as for failure to provide safes—$100 per day. The act is to be in force after July 1, 1895.

Speaker Van Sant announced the following members on the committee to conduct the Feig investigation on banks: Feig, Lovejoy, Griggs, Warner and Douglass.

The senate, in executive session, this morning confirmed all of the appointments made by the governor, except those of Berndt Anderson, as state dairy and food commissioner, and L. G. Powers as labor commissioner. These were made a special order for Tuesday next. It had been reported that there would be a fight made on these two appointments, and especially upon the dairy commissioner.

Senator Jones introduced a joint resolution to the effect that the governor appoint two commissioners to act in concert with the commissioners from other states to take radical action toward exterminating the Russian thistle, and also that the governor be requested to invite the governors of the other Northwestern states to send commissioners to a conference. The idea of Senator Jones is that it would be better to have similar legislation in Minnesota, Iowa, the Dakotas, Wisconsin, etc. The rules were suspended and the resolution given its second and third reading and final passage.

Senator Wyman, in the absence of Senator Barr, moved that H. F. 150, a joint resolution favoring the election of United States senators by the people, be taken up and given its final passage. There was some discussion as to whether the house or senate resolution on this subject would be adopted. The senators, however, seemed to want a little glory, but the attempt to substitute the senate filed failed, and the house resolution went through by a unanimous vote.

Gov. Nelson sent in a copy of a resolution adopted by the North Dakota legislature, transmitted by Hon. Roger Allin. This resolution appointed a commission to act with a commission from Minnesota to see what can be done to secure lower rates for grain and coal.

St. Paul, Feb. 2.—Senator Day, the new lieutenant governor, called the senate to order, Gov. Clough having handed over the gavel and assumed the duties of governor.

Senator Howard's bill relative to the employment of minors is a rather sweeping measure and appears to be aimed particularly at the employment of messenger boys after 6 o'clock at night. It provides heavy penalties for employing minors about saloons, gambling places or any place where liquor is sold, or for employing minors in mines, factories, etc., or A. D. T., telephone and other similar establishments between 6 p. m. and 7 a. m.

Senator Reishus got a bill in the senate this morning which raised the age of consent to 18 years. It attracted attention from the start, as the ladies began to inquire for the bill as soon as it was read.

Senator Wing's bill prohibits the whistling by traction engines on the public highways, and requires them to stop before meeting horses.

Senator Peterson's bill amends the law governing the insane hospitals. It allows the board of managers to make improvements without advertising for bids, and changes the commitment law in a number of respects, the old law having been declared unconstitutional.

Senator Roverud introduced a bill providing that where there has been a continuous travel in a certain place for six years without objection from the owner of the property, said road shall be a public highway.

Senator Spencer introduced a bill for a soldiers' relief commission. It provides that judges of probate shall appoint the commissioners.

The senate this afternoon went into committee of the whole and recommended the following bills to pass:

A bill for an act to amend sections 1 and 4 of chapter 70 of the General Laws of 1883, concerning mutilated, lost and destroyed bonds, orders and warrants.

In the House.

Bills introduced in the house to-day were as follows:

Mullen, to amend existing laws relating to the formation of farmers' mutual fire insurance companies.

Robbins, concerning chattel mortgages and other liens upon grain and for the protection of mortgages.

Reeves (by request), to amend existing laws to prevent debtors from giving preference to creditors.

Parker, to amend the constitution so that the permanent school fund may be loaned to aid in the erection of school buildings.

Soule, to amend existing laws and permitting the barbed wire fence to answer the definition of a legal fence.

Christenson, to amend existing laws so as to exempt 100 instead of 50 bushels of grain from execution.

Feig, to promote practical forestry and to appropriate $2,500 to the Minnesota Forestry Association to raise trees for free distribution on the prairies.

Sampson, to provide for maintenance of track scales at all stations by railroad companies.

Tallman, to amend the penal code so as to make Sabbath breaking punishable as misdemeanor.

The senate confirmed all the appointments recently made by Gov. Nelson, except those of Dairy Commissioner Anderson and Labor Commissioner Powers. Other names may now be sent in by Gov. Clough.

St. Paul, Feb. 3.—The committee on elections reported to the house in the Furlong-Allen contest, in favor of allowing Furlong, the contestee, to hold his seat. The report of the committee was not adopted, but made a special order for Wednesday morning at 11 o'clock, and at that time, in accordance with the statute, the two sides of the case will be heard by the house and a verdict rendered by a vote of the members. The committee report sets forth that the committee decides that Furlong is entitled to his seat because insufficient notice by the contestant, Allen, and that, though Allen appears to have a plurality of two votes, yet the evidence to that end is very conflicting and unsatisfactory.

The most interesting thing in the senate was the fight on the committee on legislative expenses. When this committee was appointed, no one suspected that it would ever be charged with extravagance, and there was general surprise when the committee yesterday afternoon decided to favor clerks for committees that in the past hardly knew what a clerk was. The senators seemed to know what had been done by the committee, for the report had not even been read when Senator Wyman moved that the report be referred back to the committee. Senator Greer and others wanted certain matters exempted, they being pet resolutions, of course. This did not work, however, and after a more or less lively discussion, in which retrenchment and reform talk came from unexpected directions, the motion of Senator Wyman to refer the report back carried practically unanimously.

In the House.

The house, after hearing committee reports, managed to summon enough energy to pass four bills. One of them was Baston's pest house measure. As was expected the bill sailed serenely through on the high tide of a majority—counting every vote in the house but two—Hartshorn and Robillard. The bills were as follows:

Staples, an act to amend chapter 14, General Laws 1889, relating to sale of tobacco.

Johns, an act to amend section 30, chapter 34, General Laws of 1878.

Cant, an act to regulate and define the powers of park commissioners of cities.

Baston, an act to prohibit the establishment of pest houses in certain cases.

The following bills were reported from committees: H. F. 64, to appropriate for a deficiency in the land department of the auditor's office, H. F. 184 offered as a substitute; H. F. 24, Johns, relating to compilation of laws, recommended to pass as amended; H. F. 85, Vogel, issuing of liquor license, recommended to pass as amended; H. F. 170, to form and organize drainage districts, recommended to pass; H. F. 48, sale of liquor prescribed within a mile of the fair grounds, recommended to pass; H. F. 47, to prevent transfer of liquor licenses, and relaing to their issuance, recommended to pass.

All these bills were given their second reading and will take their place on general orders.

In committee of the whole: Roverud, to legalize certain acts of village councils, relating to highways, etc., was recommended to pass; Gutterson, to amend chapter 13, General Statutes 1878, relating to public highways, as amended by Kendall and Gutterson, was recommended to pass.

Among the bills introduced: Knutson, to establish a state normal school at Crookston, provided such city donate to normal school board ten acres of land and said school be not built before 1897; by Mansfield, to provide for the collection of taxes in installments, one-half on June 1 and one-half on Dec. 1; by Robbins, to provide for treatment of inebriates, by counties.

MAXWELL RESIGNS.

Strained Relations Between Him and the Attorney General.

Washington, Feb. 3.—Lawrence Maxwell, solicitor general of the United States, has tendered his resignation to the president and it has been accepted. Nothing will be said at the White House regarding the matter, but it is known that the relations between Attorney General Olney and Mr. Maxwell, whose position bore most confidential relations with the office of attorney general, have been strained for some time.

Holmes Conrad of Virginia has been appointed solicitor general of the United States b t yehpresident, vice Maxwell, resigned.

Sent to the Reformatory.

St. Paul, Feb. 3.—John Cott, the young man who pleaded guilty to an indictment charging him with larceny, came before Judge Kelly and was sent to the St. Cloud reformatory. Martin McHugh, indicted with Scott, and Bruggeman, came forward for sentence and was sent to the state prison on the reformatory plan. McHugh was convicted on trial. As to Bruggeman, it is expected that he will plead guilty and throw himself on the mercy of the court. His case went over to the February term, which will open on Monday.

It Was a Fake.

Peoria, Ill., Feb. 3.—The report published that Attorney Nathan Bijur, of the stockholders' committee, had been refused access to the books of the Distilling and Cattle Feeding company, and had been ordered to blow the safe of the company in order to secure them created a great sensation throughout the city. Mr. Bijur when seen denied there had been any difficulty, and Ben. Greenhut, who was in charge of affairs at headquarters, confirmed the statement.

Killed in a Lumber Camp.

Eau Claire, Wis., Feb. 2.—Ole Otterson of this city was instantly killed by a falling tree in the Northwestern Lumber company's camp near Stanley Became Insane on a Train.

Milwaukee, Feb. 3.—O. D. Hartwell, a leading business man of Nashua, N. H., became insane on a train and was taken to the emergency hospital in this city, where he made a rope of his bed clothes, and in attempting to escape fell to the ground, breaking his leg.

Brakeman Killed.

West Superior, Wis., Feb. 3. — A brakeman named C. M. Massey, in the employ of the Omaha road, fell from the top of a train late yesterday afternoon and was instantly killed.

A DOUBLE BACK-SOMERSAULT.

A Baking Powder Company Was Too Hasty in Its Claims.

A Chicago baking powder concern, advertising far and near that its product received the highest award for strength, purity and excellence at the Chicago World's Fair, has been obliged to take a double somersault backward. Mr. John Boyd Thatcher, chairman of the Agricultural Awards, has written a letter to the said Chicago concern showing it that its advertising statements, speaking mildly, are incorrect, while the Judge of Awards of Baking Powders sends another in which he brands the claim of the pretenders as false in the most unmistakable language. Since, comes the second exposure to the effect that this baking powder, for which these spurious claims have been made, was actually found by the Exposition chemists who analyzed it, to contain ammonia! Is this the reason that the commissioners declined to give it an award for purity and wholesomeness?

THE SUBJECT OF FEEDING.

Learn to Live on as Little as You Possibly Can.

The vast majority of people are absolutely wrong on the subject of feeding, writes Sir B W. Richardson in Longman's Magazine; they think that rich and luxurious people, feeding on the richest and most luxurious foods, are the most fortunate and healthy people. I assure you it is just the reverse. I am the director of an insurance company and am often obliged to form an estimate of the commercial value of life. If, then, two persons of the same age and constitutional build come for calculation as to the monetary value of their future lives, and if one be rich and luxurious and the other be competent and frugal, frugal even to abstemiousness, I would value the life of the frugal person as 20 per cent at least better than that of the rich and luxurious person.

Dives dies in plenty, Lazarus in poverty. Do not die like Lazarus if you can help it, and do not die like Dives if you have the opportunity, but find the happy condition, easy enough to find if you determine to learn how on least food you can do the most and best work. Never eat until you are satiated; never eat in the day one heavy meal, but divide your food into three light meals, equally distributed as to time and quantity; eat slowly, take small mouthfuls; masticate, or chew, your food well; touch your food with your fingers as little as possible; do not cry out for animal food more than twice a day at most; have all animal food well cooked and do not forget fruit as food.

In Queen Elizabeth's time the orange, the golden fruit of the Hesperides, might find its way to the queen's table, but such fruit was indeed scarce. Joints of meat were cut up with the frill of paper round the end of the joint to hold by, forks being unknown, and her royal subjects, a short-lived race, knowing little how to make the most of life in the matter of feeding and drinking, suffered from diseases which were of the most avoidable as well as objectionable character. We, fortunately, live in a different reign; we have fruit galore and have clean forks instead of dirty fingers to raise our food with, two advantages equally sweet and wholesome, though so different in kind.

Curves in Ancient Masonry.

At the joint meeting of archaeological societies held in Philadelphia December 27-29, Prof. William H. Goodyear announced his discovery of Greek horizontal curves in the Maison Carree at Nimes. This is the first observation ever made of this optical refinement in a temple of the Roman art. The measurements, facts and theories connected with them will appear in the next issue of the "American Journal of Anaeology." It is Prof Goodyear's view that all curves in architectural surfaces, whether concave or convex to the point of vision, produce an effect of dimension conditioned by the laws of curvilinear perspective and that the curves of the Maison Carrée have been hitherto overlooked for this reason. At all events the measurements proving the curves to exist in the masonry construction are attested by the official architect of the City of Nimes, with whose co-operation and assistance the measurements were made. The curves differ from those of the Parthenon, being curves in plan (not in elevation), and are convex to the point of vision. The measurements also attest a perspective scheme in the intercolumnar spacings.

Shattered Cups and Superstition.

A friend who often stayed with the Lesseps family says that the count never seemed to lose sight of the education of his children, even in the smallest detail. One morning at breakfast a beautiful Dresden teacup was broken. "Ah!" cried the countess, "a disaster! Two more of that set will now be broken. It always happens so."

"Are you so superstitious," asked the count, "as to really believe that two more will broken?"

"I know it."

"Then let us get it off our minds." And, taking two of the cups by the handles, he dashed them together. The anger and dismay of the countess proved conclusively that she had not seriously held to her superstition. It also loosed any hold the absurd idea may have had on the minds of the children —Kate Field's Washington.

Plenty of Chance at Home.

"What do you hear from Hiram?" said Mrs. Snnup. "How's he doin' at college?"

"I ain't heard nothin' direct," was the reply, "but it come ter me in a roundabout sort o' way thet he is sowin' a good deal of wild oats."

"What air ye goin' ter do?"

"Hev 'im come home. I wrote 'im to-day thet ef he was so dead sot on agriculture he might ez well stick to the farm."—Detroit Free Press.

AN EXILE RETURNS.

H. HENRI ROCHEFORTE IS AGAIN IN THE CAPITAL OF FRANCE.

Fifty Thousand People Gather at the Station and Give the Editor a Warm Welcome Shouting for Rochefort and the Republic.

Paris, Feb. 5.—H. Henri Rochefort, editor-in-chief of the Republican journal L'Intransigant, who returns to France under the act of amnesty adopted last week after having been in exile since 1889, arrived in Paris to-day. The staff of his newspaper joined M. Rochefort at Amiens, eighty-four miles north of Paris, where a crowd had gathered in the railway station to welcome the well known journalist. M. Rochefort was heartily cheered. He made a brief address without leaving the train.

The public was not allowed to enter the Gare du Nord in this city, but on the arrival of the train in which M. Rochefort was travelling, the pressure became so great that the crowd broke down the barricades and invaded the station, shouting, "Vive Rochefort." "Vive le Proscript." Mr. Rochefort and his friends had the utmost difficulty in reaching their carriages. There were fully 50,000 persons gathered about the station. The greatest good humor was displayed and frantic cheering was indulged in.

M. Rochefort was much moved by the enthusiasm. He bowed repeatedly from his carriage in response to the salutes extended to him. The crowd was so dense that the horses drawing the carriage could go no faster than a walk. One opponent of M. Rochefort gave vent to his feelings by shouting "A bas Rochefort." A number of the crowd turned on him and he had a narrow escape from lynching.

The demonstration continued along the whole route from the Gare du Nord to the office of L'Intransigeant, No. 142 Rue Montmarte. The offices were illuminated and much bengal fire was burned. Outside the building was an immense red transparency on which were inscribed the words: "Vive la Republique." Traffic in Rue Montmarte was completely stopped. The crowd sang the Marseillaise and shouted for M. Rochefort until at last he appeared on a balcony and waived a handkerchief at his enthusiastic admirers. Forty policemen were stationed in front of the office, but there was no disorder. The crowd dispersed quietly.

AMERICANS SEIZED.

Officers of the U. S. S. Concord Prisoners in China.

London, Feb. 5. — A dispatch from Shanghai, says a telegram, has been received there from Chin Kiang stating that a party of officers from the American war ship Concord landed at Chin Kiang for the purpose of shooting game. They, by accident, shot a Chinaman. The populace became infuriated and attacked, seized and carried off the whole party. The commander of the Concord sent an armed force of blue jackets and marines to rescue them at all hazards. Further news in regard to the affair is anxiously awaited.

Washington, Feb. 5.—The above news has created a sensation here. Unless the officers are released at once other war vessels now in Chinese waters will be sent to the scene.

ICE WATER AND BLAZES.

Big Fire and Cold Night in Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, Feb. 5. — The Moline Plow and agricultural implement company, at Fourth and Third avenue north, Minneapolis, received a baptism of fire yesterday afternoon which resulted in the total ruin of the immense and valuable stock of the company and the complete wrecking of the big building. The structure is a four-story brick, 86x150, and all four floors were stocked with valuable and heavy farm machinery of the newest and most modern make. The loss will probably figure up above $100,000. It It was a bitter cold night for the firemen. The water turned into ice the moment the heavy streams came in contact with a wall, and sent back storms of icy hail which drove into the faces of the firemen like a pitiless blizzard.

Royal Captive.

Auckland, Feb. 4.—Advices received here from Honolulu, under date of Jan. 19, announce that ex-Queen Liliuokalani has been arrested on the charge of complicity with the insurgents in the recent rebellion. In addition, all the insurgent leaders have been taken into custody and are being tried, by court martial. Three of the leaders pleaded guilty to treason. Martial law is maintained. The rebellion against the republic of Hawaii turned out to be a complete fiasco.

Marshal Canrobert at Rest.

Paris, Feb. 5—With state honors the remains of Marshal Canrobert, the last of the marshals of France, were interred in the Hotel des Invalids. The funeral of the great soldier was made the occasion of an imposing military display.

Criminal Libel.

Seattle, Wash. Feb. 5.—M. H. Nicoll, pastor of the M. E. church, was today convicted of criminally libelling Rev. T. B. Ford, presiding elder of the district.

Looks Like War.

City of Mexico, Feb. 5.—A note has been sent to Guatemala and an answer is expected to-morrow. To-morrow, however, is the day set for the final declaration, and the question will be decided one way or another. The Universal has advices from Guatemala stating that preparations for war are being made in that country with the greatest haste and on a large scale. Barrios is continuing to work hard to secure an alliance with the other Central American states in case of hostilities with Mexico.

W. S. Morse writes from San Francisco Cal. that he does not envy us the kind of weather we are having here at present. Well, possibly not, Mr. Morse, but we have many advantages here not found in a tropical climate. We are entirely free from mosquitoes, can take our whiskey in chunks, have no fear of ice, men and many other things. Reflect and come and enjoy our incomparable ozone.

The citizens of St. Hilaire are called upon to vote on the question of issuing bonds to aid in the construction of a dam and bridge next Thursday at a special election. If the bonds are voted and the work proceeds we may expect a sharp revival of business. Without improving our natural resources we may expect to be beaten at every turn. Now is the time for action. We can make a lively town here or a farm which will you do?

A man from Thief River Falls named Laugalin was on the train today bound for the county hospital at Crookston. It seems that he has been a modern "Don Juan" up there lately and last Sunday night he was so badly scared by a party that he left for the reservation without stopping for shoes or sufficient clothing and was so badly frozen that both feet will probably have to be amputated below the knee. It is hard lines on the man but few have any sympathy for him as it looks like a hard but just punishment.

The Minneapolis Commercial Club [illegible] adopted vigorous resolutions [illegible] of the opinion [illegible] government making any entangling alliance with the Nicaragua Canal Company, and especially against its guaranteeing $70,000,000 of the company's bonds, as provided in the bill recently passed in the senate. The Commercial Club thinks the canal should be built but that the government should build, own and operate it, their so to part use. That is the right doctrine.

A reduction in freight rates on vegetables has been made by the Northern Pacific, Great Northern and Soo railroads, says the Crookston Tribune. The reduction has been made on vegetables in car loads, including onions, turnips, beets, cabbage, carrots and potatoes. This reduction is equal to about 33 per cent, and a producer can now ship a mixed car load of the vegetables from Fargo to St. Paul, Minneapolis or Duluth at 17½ cents per 100 pounds; Valley City at 19½ cents; from Crookston at 18½ cents, Grand Forks at 19 cents; from Fergus Falls at 16 cents, from Wadena at cents. If the potatoes are shipped straight in car loads, is 2 cents less per 100 pounds. This reduction will be of vast benefit to the farmers throughout the Northwest as they are figuring on going on more into diversified farming, but the freight rate on vegetables heretofore has been so high that there was little or no margin left for the producers.

The Great Northern train hands on the Langdon branch are a genial, accommodating lot, but they are especially accommodating at Conway. The agent at that place exerts a wonderful influence over the boys. "Kenney" and "Shorty" all over each other to see which can do the most to please, and the conductors always brush their clothes just before reaching Conway. Even one of the fireman washed his face the other day before the train reach that point that the agent might see how he looked when at home. The conductors set their watches back ten minutes to make sure of not leaving ahead of time baggage and freights are handled with the utmost care and the brakemen put sponges in their mouths to absorb any profanity that might arise up and escape without their notice. In sealing cars on cold days, all the agent has to do is to hold the sealer, and the brakemen do the pressing. Even the express agent has a snap on delivering candy in sealed packages. The engineer is always on the lookout to see that the engine does not get away from him an make a dart for the office, and do up the boys. The agent at Conway is a lady.—Inkster Tribune.

Notices of the amount of personal property taxes are already out. The personal tax in order to escape paying a ten cent penalty must be paid on or before the last day of February. On March 1 a ten per cent penalty is added. If not paid before April 1 the collections will be turned over to the sheriffs fees depend entirely upon his making the collections he is authoized by law to even seize the mattress and bed on which a wife is about to become a mother. The penalty for the nonpayment of real estate taxes for 1884, become delquent June 1 next, when a ten cent. penalty is added. If not paid before the following first Monday in January an additional five per cent. is added, and then the property is advertised for sale, the sale to take place on the first Monday in May following the advertisment. After a certificate of sale is issued one per cent. per month intarst is charged in this state. A man might just as well attempt to escape death as the payment of his taxes, and judgement from the excessive rate of taxation this year in Polk county to say nothing about what the rate will be next year, one is about as hard to bear as the other, with this difference however after death a fellow's assessment in this at least ceased, but how about the new—the next world?—East Grand Forks Courier.

DELAY AND DISASTER

CONGRESS STUMBLING BLINDLY WHILE THE COUNTRY SUFFERS.

The Deceitful "Commission" Trick—The Two Positive Ways of Dealing With the Financial Question—Railway and Bank Lobbies Holding the Fort.

WASHINGTON, Jan. 23.—Of all the cheap and lazy ways of evading congressional responsibility the "commission" plan is certainly the cheapest and laziest. It is also the most inefficient, and, I might add, that, while all other things here are doubtful, the one thing certain is that a commission will result in nothing, and its adoption at any time is an infallible sign of congressional cowardice and incapacity. In every great financial emergency calling for courage and ability we are sure to hear from those who lack them this cry: "This question really ought not to be in politics. A nonpartisan commission should be appointed," etc., and the proposal now made is the final confession of the deep degradation of the Fifty-third congress. I say this with no disrespect to Representative Coombs of Brooklyn, who, last summer, introduced the bill which will furnish the plan of commission, if one be adopted, for he is not particularly pleased with the plan himself, and only introduced it "at the request of the distinguished financiers who got it up."

Everybody knows the plan, for it is a very familiar device. Several gentlemen from all sections are to be appointed to collect a mass of information and on that basis present a plan to the next congress, and then, as Mr. Broderick of Kansas says of it, "congress will proceed to do as it pleases just as easily as if there had been no commission." Of course all these opposed to doing anything fall in with such a plan, and history proves their judgment good. Consider a few instances showing what a deceitful trick it is, and thus answer the question, Did such a commission ever do any good? Every really exciting question since reconstruction has, I believe, elicited from the same class of men this oracular utterance: "It really ought not to be in politics. It disturbs business. It is not properly a political question. A nonpartisan commission," etc. Men of this kind want to devitalize politics by taking all important questions out of it. What, then, remains? Office seeking, and that only.

The system was first worked successfully with a joint committee of both houses on reconstruction, and its work was so adroitly done that every Republican congressman had to accept its conclusions entire or leave his party. It was worked on the early labor movements and did what it was meant to do—nothing. The Indian rings were "suppressed" in a similar way. There was an electoral commission in 1877, of which nobody is proud, but having nothing to do with labor or money it may be called a success. There were various commissions on other labor issues which were carefully organized to do nothing and did it successfully.

Then came the tariff. Hon. Thomas A. Hendricks suggested a nonpartisan commission, as usual with men of his cast of mind, and the protectionists eagerly caught at it. They wanted no action. Hon. William D. Kelley bluntly told the house that it was incompetent to deal with so complicated a thing as the tariff, and the house meekly accepted his verdict and voted for a commission. I am happy to add that about 60 of those who thus declared their own incompetency to legislate had their judgments ratified by the people at the next election by the largest majorities ever known down to that time, for it was the great "landslide of 1882." By a mere accident the tariff commission of 1882 did something and recommended a reduction, whereupon congress promptly kicked its report out of doors and enacted the tariff of 1883.

Every one of these commissions was confessedly organized for delay, and scarcely had the country realized the political revolution of 1892 when the demand for another commission began to be heard, but the Democrats would none of it. Now, however, they regard it more favorably, for they hate like sin to admit that their party is split right down the middle—that is to say, on the line of the Ohio meridian—on the money question. While they hesitate let us consider the philosophy of it. Their great claim is that it will "avoid agitation." In reality it will treble it. There must first be a fight to get the commission appointed, then the struggle to influence the commission. Finally, when it has reported to congress, that body is under no obligations to adopt its report and will discuss as long as it likes anyhow. And who shall compose the commission? Farmers? Then we shall probably get a report in favor of a land bank. Railroaders? Then you may be sure that railroad bonds will be recommended as part of the basis for banking. Politicians? They will recommend whatever bill will, in their judgment, carry the next election. After that the deluge. Bankers? Their private credit, indorsed by government—in short, the Baltimore plan. If the commission be made up from all these, there will be as many separate reports as there are classes, and the resulting debate in congress will be doubly prolonged. "Awa' wi' such nonsense!"

The people should rise up right now and demand that their representatives do what they were elected to do—settle it—and if this congress fails the next should be called at once. Now is the golden opportunity. The people see the real trouble. As was so ably set forth by Senator Dubois in a recent speech: "Speedy action now will the quicker sweep away the clouds and mists which obscure the vision of the people and enable them to perceive with clearness and accuracy that it is our monetary and not our revenue laws which bring distress and want and falling prices. It will then be made plain to them that this Carlisle bill can bring no relief, and they will so fully understand the necessity for an enlarging currency and so thoroughly appreciate the fact that there can be no prosperity for us under a gold standard that their will cannot be ignored."

Every reading man knows the alternative. If the gold standard is to be maintained, the currency must be contracted one-half and at once. Some of the goldbugs are honest enough to admit it, but the New Englanders add that if it is done suddenly even Vermont will go Democratic. If it is not to be gold, then it must be, first, the free coinage of silver and after that a truly scientific system of government money based not on the promise to pay, but on the promise to receive. A government which collects and expends $500,000,000 per year can make its own money of any convenient substance it chooses, and it is criminal folly to say that the prosperity of 70,000,000 people must hang on the convenience of that little coterie which wants to adjust its money by the English standard, to avoid the trifling labor of calculating the exchange. Every clear headed man in congress knows that we must choose between these alternatives, and that practically it does not make a particle of difference whether the Republican Walker bill or any of the numerous Democratic bills be passed, and the candid ones freely admit it in private, but in congress they persist in talking about the promise to pay and avoiding all reference to the promise to receive. Now is the accepted time for the country to come to a decision between the gold basis with enormous contraction and further decline in prices, or their opposites, and every congressman who votes for postponement should be spotted by his constituents. I take my politics good naturedly, but I must say that if the American people consent to have this money question put in commission till next December and then fiddled with through another session, as it surely would be, they will richly deserve all they suffer.

I have said much on this scheme, not because I think it will be adopted, but because it is such a beautiful illustration of the system of putting things off, and I am told that it is to be pushed near the close of the session. I think its defeat certain, because the bankers are generally opposed to it. They grow more eager every day to have the present congress act, and the action of their agents makes me believe that they do not expect much from the Fifty-fourth congress. It is the cowardly section of the Democrats (rather a large section at present) which is quietly pushing this scheme. I have made out a list of all the measures which are denounced by the goldbugs as "Populistic" and "socialistic" and may therefore be presumed to be in the interest of the people, and while their promoters are still sanguine I confess that I can find no evidence of progress. All the labor bills in the McGann committee seem to me in about the same condition they were last summer. All the agricultural bills for which Mr Hatch has fought so hard and so long seem to me on the down grade. The banking and currency committee talks of reviving the bill to coin the seigniorage, and thereby relieve the treasury to the extent of $55,000,000, and they say that Cleveland would now sign it, but that committee reminds me of nothing so much as a colony of wild bees just after the woodsmen have felled their tree, and it has split open and exposed their store. Any one who has watched them crawl about and buzz around in their mournful and bewildered way has a fair picture of this committee.

The advocates of some measure to bring the Pacific railroads to book continue to assure us that they will succeed soon, and the matter is really to be debated in the house, but I can find nothing encouraging in the prospect. The Reilly bill proposes briefly to postpone the payment of the debt 50 years at 2 per cent interest, the object being to release the estates of Stanford, Huntington and others from all liabilities. Of course we all know that such a postponement really means an abandonment of the government's case, and the only reason I have for thinking that the monopolists are in any danger whatever is that their agents are already buzzing very lively in the lobbies. Of course they would not be here if they did not hope or fear something.

If there are ten men in this house who really understand the subject or are even well informed on the history of the Pacific railways, I have not met them. Indeed, as Congressman Bailey of Texas says, knowledge of the subject amounts to a science in itself, and railroad law is now a separate profession, the rules being as numerous and complicated as in the whole body of real estate and contract law outside. The companies at the very beginning looked a long way ahead and have added a great variety of kinks to the natural complications. Hence, I repeat, no action is to be expected this year. J. H. BROWNING.

A Dignified, Cultured Gentleman.

Ex-Governor Davis H. Waite of Colorado arrived in the city today, and was given a greeting by Populist leaders at the Great Northern hotel.

There is nothing in the appearance, language or bearing of Governor Waite which would indicate the possession of the fighting qualities he developed during his stormy career as governor of the Centennial State. In figure he is tall, with manner dignified, but not austere, is easy and fluent in conversation and shows wide knowledge of men and affairs. He is an educated man, and no one who talks with him can doubt his sincerity of purpose. No man, it is said, has commanded truer devotion from his followers than that extended to Governor Waite by his adherents in Colorado. With snow white hair and beard and gold rimmed spectacles, he looks more the preacher than politician. He feels bitterly the misrepresentation to which he says he was subjected in regard to the speech which made him famous.—Chicago Post.

Foes of the Income Tax.

It is apparent from the statement of Senator Lodge that the Republican senators, allied with Mr. Hill, will make a bitter fight against the appropriation for the enforcement of the income tax law. They will do this on the demand of the multimillionaires of the east, who are always the loudest complainants against any failure to enforce laws that are for their benefit. Let a law touch their pocketbooks, and there is nothing that will not be done—perjury, bribery, anything—to stop its enforcement. And they can always count on the aid of Republican senators.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

Miss Caustique—Yes, particularly after they have been turned down.

A Pertinent Paragraph.

"Our country if right, should be kept right; if wrong should be put right," is a political maxim which paraphrased applies to other conditions of life, thus: Our health if right, should be kept right; if wrong should be put right, especially in bodily ailments, such as pains and aches, which St. Jacobs Oil promptly cures. Many out of work should heed to give it a chance to cure and it will give them a chance to go to work cured. Another adage is: "He doeth best, who doeth well." Well, of course, you want to be well from all sorts of aches, and the best thing to do is to use the great remedy. He who does so is doing well indeed.

Warming Milk in Winter.

The success in making winter butter with a June butter flavor by means of a bacillus is very suggestive. It is possible that such bacillus always exists in milk made from wholesome feed, though it may be more abundant when cows are fed on fresh grass in summer. The breath of a cow at pasture at that season is pleasantly fragrant, and this fact has been recognized by those close observers, the poets. Warming the milk in winter to a temperature of 120 degrees to 130 degrees makes the cream rise more quickly, churn more easily, and improves the quality of the butter. If the milk is heated too much the butter will be soft as it is in summer, and the quality will also be impaired.

No Use for Them.

Col. Nipper—Which were those?

Col. Julip—The olives and water; I've no use for such things that call for an acquired taste.

The Modern Invalid

Has tastes: medicinally, in keeping with other luxuries. A remedy must be pleasantly acceptable in form, purely wholesome in composition, truly beneficial in effect and entirely free from every objectionable quality. If really ill he consults a physician; if constipated he uses the gentle laxative, Syrup of Figs.

To Prevent Water Pipes Freezing.

Down in the cellar you will find spigots at the end of each pipe, where the water can be completely shut off. You know that when a pipe bursts it is because the water in it has frozen and, of course, expanded in the freezing and broken the pipe at the weakest point, so that if the water is shut off altogether there is nothing to freeze. Only do that, however, when you think the frost is going to be severe. Ordinarily just let the water drip a little, because running water is less apt to freeze, and if it does the slightly open faucet gives it room to expand.

There is more Catarrh in this section of the country than all other diseases put together, and until the last few years was supposed to be incurable. For a great many years doctors pronounced it a local disease, and prescribed local remedies, and by constantly failing to cure with local treatment, pronounced it incurable. Science has proven catarrh to be a constitutional disease, and therefore requires constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, Ohio, is the only constitutional cure on the market. It is taken internally in doses from 10 drops to a teaspoonful. It acts directly on the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. They offer one hundred dollars for any case it fails to cure. Send for circulars and testimonials. Address F. J. 262 BUS. DANVERS YELLOW ONIONS Were grown by John L. Rath, East Saginaw, from one pound of seed. This tremendous yield, at the rate of 1,048 bushels per acre, Mr. Rath says was only possible because he used Salzer's seeds. We understand that Mr. Salzer's seeds are the earliest in the world, especially his beets, carrots, cabbage, cucumbers, onions, peas, corn, radishes, tomatoes, etc., and that he sells to market gardeners and farmers at lowest wholesale prices.

If You Will Cut This Out and Send It with $1 money order to the John A. Salzer Seed company, La Crosse, Wis., you will get free thirty-five packages earliest vegetable seeds and their wonderful catalogue, or for 13 cents in stamps a package above Prize Danvers Onions and their catalogue free. wnu

It is an interesting fact, not generally known, that the criminal code of the United States prescribes the penalty of death for nearly seventy offenses. Most of these, however, pertain to the army and navy, the principal exceptions being treason, murder, rape and arson. The federal laws containing such penalties have stood for over 100 years, and an effort is now being made to revise and modify them.

A WOMAN'S NERVES.

THE STORY OF A WOMAN TO WHOM NOISE WAS TORTURE.

Prostrated By the Least Excitement—Physicians Baffled By Her Case.

[From the Gate City, Keokuk, Iowa.]

Mrs. Helen Meyers, whose home is at 3515 Vernon avenue, Chicago, and whose visit to Keokuk, Ia., will long be remembered, was at one time afflicted with a nervous malady which at times drove her nearly to distraction. "Those terrible headaches are a thing of the past," she said the other day to a Gate City representative, "and there is quite a story in connection with it, too. "My nervous system sustained a great shock some fifteen years ago, brought on, I believe, through too much worrying over family matters and then allowing my love for my books to get the better of my discretion where my health was concerned. Why, whenever my affairs at home did not go along just as I expected, I would invariably become prostrated from the excitement and I would consider myself fortunate indeed if the effects of the attack would not remain for a week. I was obliged to give up our pleasant home not far from the Lake Shore drive, because I could not stand the noise in that locality. I could find no place in the city which I deemed suitable to one whose nervous system was always on the point of explosion. To add to my misfortunes my complexion underwent a change and I looked so yellow and sallow that I was ashamed to venture from the house at all.

"'Madam,' said my doctor to me soon after an unusually severe attack of the malady, 'unless you leave the city and seek some place of quiet, you will never recover.' So I concluded I would visit my uncle, who lives in Dallas county, Iowa, and whose farm would surely be a good place for one in my pitiable condition. I picked up the Gate City one day and happened to come across an interesting recital of the recovery of some woman in New York state who was afflicted as I had been. This woman had been cured by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I thought that if Pink Pills cured that woman they might do the same for me. I began to take the pills according to directions and I began to feel better from the start. After I had taken several boxes of them I was ready to go back to Chicago. My nervousness was gone and my complexion was as fresh as that of any 16-year-old girl in Iowa, and Pink Pills is what put the color in my cheeks. No wonder I am in such high spirits and feel like a prize fighter. And no wonder I like to come to Keokuk, for if it had not been for Pink Pills bought from a Keokuk firm I would not be alive now," laughingly concluded the lady.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

He Drew the Line at Monkeys.

A Philadelphia young man's best girl sent him for a Christmas a beautiful woolen monkey that was as large as life and twice as natural. With much cunning she bribed the housemaid to attach it to the top of the doorway opening into his room by means of an elastic piece of rubber, so that Jocko would bounce up and down in a life-like way at the slightest jar. About midnight the young man returned home, and as he reached the door of his room his head hit the monkey and set it to jumping vigorously. By the faint light from the street he dimly saw the outline of the beast, and with a wild yell he rushed down stairs and shut himself up in the parlor, where the night was passed on the sofa. In the morning he gained sufficient courage to face the mystery, but when he saw what it was that had frightened him he swore a blue streak and his "best girl" is now minus her yellow jacket and peacock feather—in other words, the engagement is broken.—Boston Herald.

Jew the Only Correct Name.

Jews refer to the religion which the Jews profess. Hebrew refers to a language which they no longer speak, and has consequently no meaning at the present time. Israelite refers to a nation which they at one time formed, and it has at present no signification except when reference is made to the ancient nation. The Jews are a religious community, and that is all that separates them or distinguishes them from their fellow citizens. The Jews do not call themselves Hebrews. A few who do not know any better may call themselves so, but they are wrong. Those who know what is right call themselves Jews, and that is the only correct name.—Jewish Tidings.

FROZEN TO DEATH.

Prospectors in the Rainy Lake Region Perish.

Duluth, Minn., Feb. 5.—Several reports have been received in Duluth during the winter of prospectors in the Rainy Lake and Seine river gold country being frozen to death. A man by the name of McLain was picked up within two miles of Rainy Lake City on New Year's day, frozen stiff, after he had walked only one mile. The thermometer was 42 degrees below zero.

To-day D. A. Melrose, who owns a great deal of valuable gold property in the Rainy Lake and Seine river district, received a letter from James Cummings stating that of a party of nine prospectors who were near Wild Potato creek, about 100 miles from Rainy Lake City, and about fifty miles from Fort Francis, on New Year's day, he was the only survivor. Cummings states that it fell to 48 degrees below zero on that day, and that all of the party sank from exhaustion from the effects of the cold. He managed to reach a camp near Wild Potato creek, and thinks his companions were frozen. There is a variance of opinion in Duluth, but the men who have been in the gold region say the cold there is terrible and that many of the prospectors carry so much whisky that they are often nearly stupified.

Melrose left to-day for St. Paul, but said he knows only what Cummings tells him in his letter, although he thinks it is true.

BITTEN BY A DOG.

Two Railroad Men in St. Paul Die of Hydrophobia.

St. Paul, Feb. 5.—It has just been discovered that R. L. Gibbs, auditor of freight receipts of the Great Northern railroad, and Frank Hoshaw, a clerk in the Great Northern general offices, died of hydrophobia. Mr. Gibbs died Dec. 22 and Mr. Hoshaw Jan 24. When Mr. Gibbs died the physicians were suspicious of rabies, but were not in a position to announce it as such. There is only one sure test of rabies, and that is to make a post mortem and insert portions of the diseased brain and spinal cord into some animal, usually a rabbit, and await the result. The physicians were not able to make the post mortem and subsequent experiments, so it was given out that Mr. Gibbs died of cerebo spinal meningitis.

In the case of Mr. Hoshaw, however, the symptoms of rabies were very pronounced. He was wildly delirious and died in awful agony. A post mortem showed that Hoshaw died of rabies.

An investigation was then made, and it was found that one day in November Gibbs and Hoshaw were bitten on the hands by a stray dog in the Great Northern office. The wounds, however, were merely scratches, and as no blood was drawn, the men did not give the matter a second thought. It also developed that Miss Margaret J. Otis, a lady clerk, was bitten by the same dog. In her case, however, the blood was drawn. She has just been sent to the Pasteur institute in New York. While no symptoms of rabies have been developed in her case, it has been thought best to give her treatment, as rabies may develop any time within six months.

Cleveland's Plan Approved.

Washington, Feb. 5.—Upon inquiry of Private Secretary Thurber at the White House it is learned that the president has received a very large number of telegrams and letters from prominent citizens, chambers of commerce and other trade organizations in all parts of the country, heartily endorsing the recommendations contained in his recent message to congress, and recognizing the necessity for immediate action for the preservation of the national credit and public faith.

Big Pine Deal.

Minneapolis, Feb. 5.—A sale has just been closed which conveys between 38,000 and 39,000 acres of Minnesota pine lands, containing about 300,000,000 feet of lumber, to James T. Hurst of Wyandotte, Mich., and Spencer O. Fisher of West Bay City, Mich. These gentlemen are members of one of the leading lumber firms of Michigan, and are putting in about 00,000,000 feet of logs this winter.

Governor of Vladivostock.

St. Paul, Feb. 5.—Sergo Mikalo Mikalovitch, Count General de Jdolomka, governor of the Russian fortress of Vladovistock, with the Countess de Jdolomka, passed through the city yesterday, en route for Washington, and thence to St. Petersburg, having been relieved from his government of the Russian province on the Sea of Japan by Czar Nicholas.

Sent Back to China.

Hiroshima, Feb. 5.—The envoys from China who were sent to negotiate for peace with Japan will leave this city for Nagasaki to-morrow. An examination of their credentials revealed the fact that the envoys did not have plenary power to treat for peace, and they were thereupon told that they had better return to their own country.

To Cover Murder.

Bismarck, N. D., Feb. 5.—Investigation shows almost conclusively that the fire resulting in the death of the Olson family was to cover a murder, as he had $600 in money in the house. A warrant is out for the person suspected, but the authorities request the suppression of his name until the arrest is made.

Keller in Washington.

Washington, Feb. 5.—Senator Henry Keller of Sauk Center is in Washington. He says he is here looking after the issue of a patent, but from other sources it is learned that the senator is opposed to the confirmation of the man selected for the postoffice at Sauk Center and intends to make a fight.

ANTITOXINE NOT NEW.

Inoculation by Poison Dates as Far Back as Mithridates, King of Pontus.

There is nothing new under the sun. Inoculation with antitoxine, it appears according to a learned and ingenious correspondent of a Munich medical journal, is by no means new, nor even modern, having been employed by no less a person than Mithridates, King of Pontus. The authority for this statement is the Roman naturalist Pliny, who relates that this monarch, for reasons known to himself, was afraid of being poisoned, and therefore made himself proof against all attempts by gradually accustoming himself to all known poisons, producing the state called mithridaticum. He was accustomed to make use of an antidote called mithridaticum, whose principal ingredient was the blood of the Pontic duck, this creature having been chosen because it had the reputation of living on poison. Here, therefore, we have the case of the blood of an immune animal being used to make another animal immune.

Sea Trip of Sparrows.

"There," said Clerk Sargent the other day, as a sparrow, that had been resting upon one of the iron brace rods of the Portland Harbor steamer Forest Queen flew toward the center of the boat and disappeared; "that fellow has been the round trip with us clear to Long Island, and has now gone in among the life preservers to make himself comfortable. Watch now." Going along Mr. Sargent shook one or two of the great mass of cork buoys that formed overhead and almost continuous ceiling for the upper deck, and the disturbed bird flew out, and settled upon one of the rods, but showed no disposition to leave the boat. "I've seen these rods literally covered with sparrows," continued Mr. Sargent. "They will go over the entire route, but seem averse to landing at any of the islands, and return to the city."—Lewiston Journal.

Blanket the Horses.

Did you ever stop to think of the value of a blanket to the colt or work horse? "What a foolish question," I can hear many farmers exclaim, followed by "a blanket is only for city horses, I want my horses tough." My friend, did you ever notice how much more food it takes for you when it is cold and how much extra clothing you put on? A horse is remarkably thin skinned and in a draught of the stable or a cold stall suffers acutely. His food does him but little good when he is in this condition. Much of it passes through completely undigested and it requires at least one-third more food good judges say. Good strong blankets are cheap and will pay for themselves in the food saved in a month. Then think of the better appearance of the horse with his soft, smooth silky coat.—E. T. Ridick.

Planting the Standard

All hail Columbus! Behold the great navigator as he lands. The perils of the deep are past. The clouds of fear have vanished. The night of gloom has ended. In the heavens the sun of success shines resplendent. Morning has dawned.

Imperiously the banner of haughty Spain greets the daylight. Upon its fluttering folds are inscribed the destinies of a new world. Its gleaming surface marks a long advance in the evolution of the human race. It tells a story of prophecy unparalleled, of development unapproached in the fullness of recorded time. It crowns with triumph the efforts of genius.

The World's Fair contained no finer statue of the great discoverer than this colossal figure. It commanded from its pedestal the eastern entrance to the Administration building. The majesty of its dimensions, the vigor and aggressiveness of its expression and the artistic finish of its composition made it admired as a genuine sculptural triumph.

Another Standard Proudly Displayed at the Fair was that of
Dr. Price's Cream Baking Powder
A Standard of Excellence for Forty Years.

It was the standard of unequalled strength, perfect purity and wholesome results. The award to Dr. Price's of highest honors at the Fair furnishes conclusive evidence of its superiority over all other baking powders.

The Scotch Joke and Surgery.

A noble instance of Mark Tapleyism, not to say heroism, was supplied recently at the Royal Infirmary. The case was in the hands of Prof. Barlow, and was that of an iron-worker who had met with an accident. As a result of an explosion in a furnace a piece of red-hot iron four inches in length embedded itself in the man's eye and cheek, necessitating the removal of the dreadfully burned eye-ball. This done, the question arose among those present at the operation as to the nature of the metal extracted, when the patient himself, with extraordinary nerve, asked to be allowed to handle the substance, and pronouncing it to be cast-iron, quaintly added: "Better send it back to the works, or they'll be hacing me up for stealing."—Glasgow News.

ON THE ROAD to recovery, the young woman who is taking Doctor Pierce's Favorite Prescription. In maidenhood, womanhood, wifehood and motherhood the "Prescription" is a supporting tonic and nervine that's peculiarly adapted to her needs, regulating, strengthening and curing the derangements of the sex. Why is it so many women owe their beauty to Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription? Because beauty of form and face radiate from the common center—health. The best bodily condition results from good food, fresh air and exercise coupled with the judicious use of the "Prescription."

If there be headache, pain in the back, bearing-down sensations, or general debility, or if there be nervous disturbance, nervous prostration, and sleeplessness, the "Prescription" reaches the origin of the trouble and corrects it. It dispels aches and pains, corrects displacements and cures catarrhal inflammation of the lining membranes, falling of the womb, ulceration, irregularities and kindred maladies.

"FALLING OF WOMB."

MRS. FRANK CAMFIELD, of *East Dickinson, Franklin Co., N. My troubles were of the womb — inflammatory and bearing-down sensations and the doctors all said, they could not cure me.

THE HAYWARD TRIAL

THE GING MURDER TRIAL ON AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Charles Blixt; the Self-Confessed Slayer of the Girl, Takes the Stand and Goes Into Details of the Crime. Blixt Breaks Down and Sobs Like a Child.

Minneapolis, Feb. 8.—It was evident at the cross-examination of Claus Blixt proceeded to-day, that Erwin had determined on a different line of attack from that attempted yesterday which had so signally failed. He threatened and browbeat the witness.

Mr. Erwin took up each discrepancy between Blixt's testimony yesterday and the first confession he made, wherein he asserted that Hayward had done the actual shooting, and asked the witness the reason for it. Blixt's invariable reply was that he was confused at the time, and his recollection was not clear. He had thought it over every day since then, and all the details had come back to him. Oftentimes the efforts of the lawyer to entrap him were foiled by the stolidity and simplicity of the witness.

Mrs. Blixt Testifies.

Blixt was taken ill with headache and excused until to-morrow.

Mrs. Blixt was next called. Julia Ellen Blixt is a plain little woman with a pale face, reddish gold hair drawn straight back and dressed in black with a sailor hat of the same color. They were married two years ago and went to the Ozark flats April 14. Mrs. Blixt's brother, Charles Anderson, was at the flats the latter part of the time and was employed during November to fire up from 3 to 7. Mrs. Blixt knew Harry Hayward. He was in the basement every night for three weeks or a month before the murder. He always talked with Blixt when they were alone. They talked for hours, often talking till late. Mrs. Blixt did not hear what they said, but often asked her husband.

Mrs. Blixt couldn't name any special time they were talking. She did not think they were together Saturday, but she did see them on Monday. They were not sitting down. She was preparing supper and thought it was after 6, as it was late. She saw Hayward again after Blixt went out.

"What time was it Blixt went out?"

"I can't exactly say. It was 7, or maybe later."

Blixt went out with coat and cap. He came back about 10 o'clock. She did not think Blixt went up stairs after he got back. He might have done so, but he went to bed. She noticed he had been drinking.

At the time Blixt had gone up stairs at 7 o'clock Harry had come down. He said, "Where's the boss." Mrs. Blixt said, "He's just gone out, didn't you meet him?" He said, "That's so, I met him." Harry then ran out the back door. About 11 o'clock Harry came in again and went to our bed room. He said, "Blixt, are you asleep?" Then he came into the room and said the water meter was leaking, looking at Blixt as he went out.

"About 3 o'clock Harry came down stairs again and hollered out aloud: 'Blixt, are you asleep?' Then he said: 'That girl on the fifth floor has been murdered. She was murdered for her money,' he says. 'Some fellers of her for her money. Isn't that too bad? I'm afraid my $7,000 is lost. I wonder if I'd better go and tell the insurance people in the morning. And don't know who did it. They ain't got no clue.'"

Minneapolis, Feb. 9.—The first witness in the Hayward murder trial was Hans Barlow. Hans had been present in the basement of the Ozark flats when Blixt cut the T rail for Harry Hayward. He was put on by the state to corroborate Blixt's story of that transaction, and did so without contradicting Blixt in any important detail. He had helped Blixt cut the rail in two, and he heard Harry Hayward scold Blixt for cutting it instead of simply bending it. On cross-examination an admission was drawn from him that he had served a term in the workhouse.

Claus Blixt was again put on the stand, and Mr. Erwin, after long questioning as to the details of his story, sprung a sensation. He asked him if he had not, on Nov. 2, gone to the Arnold hotel, on Central avenue, with two other men, and rented some rooms.

"That's the biggest lie I ever heard," exclaimed Blixt.

Mr. Erwin questioned him closely, but Blixt professed entire ignorance about the alleged occurrence. The hotel register was introduced in evidence, and Erwin asked Blixt if the signature of "Arne W. Teller, Wally City," wasn't written by him. Blixt denied utterly that he had ever even seen the register. These questions point to a theory of the defense that the murder was the work of a gang of green goods men, and that Hayward had nothing to do with it.

Adry Appears.

Adry Hayward, the brother of the accused, made his first appearance in the court room this afternoon. As he took his seat he shook hands in a cordial manner with Blixt. Harry came in a minute later, but did not cast a glance toward the other two. Adry half-rose in his chair as if he would meet his brother, but, receiving no recognition from Harry, he settled back in his chair. A moment later he got up and went to Harry. The two shook hands, but Harry scarcely looked at the brother. Adry appeared to feel the slight, and without saying a word he stepped back to his seat.

The witness, Blixt, was again placed on the stand, and the cross-examination continued, but Attorney Erwin did not follow up the hotel episode any further. He carried Blixt back to the night of the murder, questioning him closely as to the distance he drove after shooting Catherine Ging, and his visit to the Swede flagman's cabin on his way home. Witness said he had been acquainted with the flagman. He did not find the flagman "at home," and soon left the place. The witness was questioned closely in regard to the course taken in going down town. This was tedious in the extreme, and there were no material disclosures.

Minneapolis, Feb. 10—Mr. Erwin was not present when the Hayward murder trial was resumed this morning, and it was feared that his long bout with Blixt in the cross-examination had exhausted him, but he came in later. The cross-examination of the assistant janitor, Charles Anderson, devolved upon John Day Smith, who elicited nothing of importance. Frank Tucker, the elevator boy at the Ozark flats, testified in further corroboration of Blixt as to the long talks the janitor was accustomed to have with Harry Hayward in the basement of the Ozark, and especially as to the conferences the two had on the day of the murder.

Frank McCormick, a barkeeper, testified to selling Harry Hayward on the day of the murder, a flask of whisky like the one Blixt says Harry gave him. John Kennedy, a flagman, corroborated Blixt's testimony as to his visit to the station on the night of the murder. The state called S. E. Hance to further corroborate the whisky purchase, but Mr. Erwin said Harry would admit the purchase on the stand. This was the first intimation that Harry Hayward would himself go on the stand.

J. W. Weatherspoon, elevator man at the Oneida block, corroborated Blixt's story of how Miss Ging signed the $7,000 note to Harry Hayward in his office and how he and Blixt witnessed the signature. Then Harry Spencer, a waiter, told how Harry and Miss Ging came to the restaurant, saying:

"I went to get their orders. I noticed a roll of money. Hayward said to me: 'Don't you think it's foolish for a young woman to show so much—$2,000?' I coincided with him, and expressed some doubt as to there being 2,000, and Harry said it was. The roll of bills was as big as a glass tumbler. There was a $10 bill on the outside."

He told also of other occasions when the two had visited the restaurant.

L. Metzger, a jeweler, corroborated another part of Blixt's story about leaving his watch to be fixed on the night of the murder.

Louise Ireland, niece of Miss Ging, testified that Hayward was in Miss Ging's rooms, nearly every night, but his conduct was perfectly proper. She had not noticed her aunt have much money just before the murder.

Minneapolis, Feb. 12.—When court was called to order Emil Ferrant was put on the stand to tell what he knew about the scene in the Ozark on the night of the murder. The witness said that at 11 o'clock he was preparing to go to bed, when he heard a commotion down stairs. Upon going down he found Henry Goosman, whose father owns the livery stable, and Officer Thomas Britt. Ferrant asked Goosman what was the excitement. The reply was that Miss Ging had been out riding that evening and met with a serious accident. Harry came in presently and made those singular remarks about his business relations with the girl, which have been testified to by several witnesses. He also produced some letters, but they were read only in part.

When it came to calling the next witness Mr. Nye arose and said: "It is the intention of the state to introduce the testimony of Adry Hayward at this time. He is not in the room, I see, but can be sent for at once."

Mr. Erwin was on his feet at once. "May it please the court," he began in his suave way, "this is somewhat of a surprise to us. We wish to have experts here to listen to the testimony of Adry Hayward. One of them is sick and could not appear to-day. I desire that, if possible, some other witness be put on at this time, so as to save me the inconvenience of having a report of the proceedings read and explained to my experts. You understand that it is not the testimony itself that is of so much importance, but the manner in which it is given."

Judge Smith observed that the case must go on, and asked Attorney Nye if he had any other witness who could be put upon the stand at that time. Mr. Nye said that he objected to changing the order of the testimony, but would call ex-Mayor Eustis rather than inconvenience the defense.

The strongest testimony the state has brought out, aside from the confession of Blixt, came when most unexpected. The defense has inferred right along that Miss Ging was mixed up with a green goods gang of which Harry knew nothing. From all the state witnesses it appeared, as far as could be seen, that Harry did not know of Miss Ging's rides the two nights previous to the murder. In fact, Miss Ireland, herself, had said that Harry asked after Miss Ging both times. Then like lightning from a clear sky came the blow to the defense. Miss Ireland was allowed an explanation, and she said that Harry had told her aunt not to let her know of the jaunts with him in the evening. Her aunt had said that was his wish, and at the same time informed her not to "give it away" that she knew Miss Ging was out with Harry, as he was not to know that the niece had been told of their relations. This was the first evidence to knock out the green goods gang theory, and implicate Harry.

The buggy in which Blixt killed Miss Ging was brought into court to be used in the course of George Goosman's testimony. It was an object of much attention.

STARVED IN THE STABLE.

Five Cows Belonging to Mrs. Mary McCue.

St. Paul, Feb. 12. — "The merciful man is merciful to his beast," and the same is equally true of woman, but when the woman is a widow and hasn't the means to feed her children is it to be expected that mercy will take the form of food? The woman in this case is Mrs. Mary McCue, a widow living out on West Seventh street, about a half-mile this side of Fort Snelling. Mrs. McCue has a little dairy farm, and in the stable yard about the house there lie the bodies of four fine cows—dead of starvation. Within the stable there is another dead cow, and fourteen others still retain the breath of life, though one, a poor old white animal, who has done service in the dairy for many a year, is sighing her old life out in gulps, which are the brute's efforts to reach the cud that starvation has denied her.

For Killing a Squaw.

Deadwood, S. D., Feb. 12. — The grand jury returned an indictment against John Lance, alias John Owlhead, an Indian, for complicity in the murder of a squaw on the Rosebud agency some weeks ago. Hollow Bull, husband of the murdered squaw, appeared before the grand jury and gave strong evidence against the accused. Thunder Hawk, the active spirit in the murder, committed suicide in the Hot Springs jail.

Red Wing's Reform School.

IS LONG OVERDUE.

NO NEWS FROM THE FRENCH LINER LA GASCOGNE.

The Cunarder Umbria Arrives Safely From Liverpool, but Brings No Tidings of the La Gascogne, Which Should Have Arrived Feb. 3.

New York, Feb. 12.—The Cunarder Umbria, Capt. Dutton, which sailed from Liverpool Feb. 2, via Queenstown 3d, reached Quarantine this morning. She brings no word of the French liner La Gascogne. Shortly after noon yesterday the monster ocean greyhound steamer passed quarantine, her shrouds and part of her hull encased with ice and glistening with myriads of diamonds. Icicles hang from her shrouds both fore and aft. From the topmost edge of the bridge to the deck was one mass of glittering ice, and the lifeboats, davits and taff rails were covered with it. It was during the only spell of good weather on the vessel's voyage that she was enabled to rescue fourteen persons who were adrift in a water-logged helpless bark. Speaking of the rescue, Capt. Dutton said:

"We had a fairly good voyage after leaving Queenstown, until we struck the blizzard outside the Hook yesterday. Of course the weather was bad and we had heavy seas; but I have had far worse voyages. It was at 12:14 a. m. on Feb. 6 that we picked up the captain and crew of the French bark Jean Baptiste. It was about 11 o'clock at night when report was made to me that a White Star line freighter, supposed to be the Cevic, had been sighted. The captain of the Cevic is an old friend of mine, and I had signals sent up to let him know where we were. The Cevic was off our port side. The signals were sent up and seen by the French bark which was over on our starboard side about five miles away. It was not particularly cold, but there was a snow storm and a heavy westerly swell.

"The distressed crew was displaying red lights to show that the vessel was out of control, and as we made toward her, three men went up into the mizzen rigging with torches. The bark was water-logged. A boat with five men in command of Second Officer Hogg was lowered. When our boat reached the distressed vessel the men found that the crew had launched two boats and were loading all of their effects. Capt. Lebot and his son were the last to leave the Jean Baptiste. They came away in our boat. The rest of the crew came to us in their own boats and said they had brought all their personal effects with them."

SEVEN PERISH.

Only Two of a Crew of Nine Men Are Saved.

Fire Island, Feb. 12.—Two men who clung for forty hours to the rigging of their vessel, off Fire Island beach, were rescued at midnight by the crew of the Lone Hill life-saving station. The vessel proved to be the schooner Louis V. Place, Capt. Squires, coal-laden, from Baltimore, to New York. She left Baltimore on Jan. 28, and was wrecked during the height of the gale. Nine men took to the rigging when the vessel went down an eighth of a mile off the shore, and there they clung in the raging blizzard with the spray freezing as it dashed over them, until, one by one, seven of them slipped into the sea, or hung lifeless, bound to the rigging by a rope. Two only were able to endure the terrible exposure. They are S. J. Nelson, whose home is in Providence, R. I., and William Stevens, a German of Rockland, Me. The rescued men were badly frost-bitten, and it is thought that Nelson will lose both feet.

SWINDLED A RAILROAD.

Serious Charge Against a Great Northern Agent.

Helena, Mont., Feb. 12. — L. D. Smith is under arrest at Havre, and is charged with defrauding the Great Northern out of at least $17,000 while acting as claim agent for stock killed and personal damages. He is charged with forgery and embezzlement. He had been with the road about three years. He left Missouri four years ago with officers hot on his heels, being charged with getting money under false pretenses. The Missouri officers caught him at Great Falls two years ago, but he got them arrested for kidnapping, and they left the state to avoid the penitentiary.

Suicided by Freezing.

Muscatine, Iowa, Feb. 12. — George Moore, the well known blind son of the late Banker Moore, walked across the Mississippi river high bridge last night, took off his clothing and remained there until he froze to death. He was thirty-six years of age, highly educated and wealthy. He had been blind all his life.

They Stole Swine.

Marshalltown, Iowa, Feb. 12—Ten fat steers and a number of hogs were recently stolen from Messrs. Swearengin & Randall, prominent stockmen of this county. Officers of this city arrested Charles Bottger and E. H. Buchanan on suspicion. They confessed the crime. The cattle were slaughtered and sold to butchers here, who will probably be prosecuted as accessories.

Snow in Ireland.

Dublin, Feb. 12. — A terrific snow storm prevails in Ireland. The snow lies three feet deep on the level, and in some places is drifted to the depth of from eight to ten feet. The mail service has stopped throughout the North of Ireland. In Cork and elsewhere the running of trains has been stopped.

Supreme Court Findings.

Bismarck, N. D., Feb. 12.—The supreme court decides in the case of Bishop against the Milwaukee road that the road is responsible for damage to stock on a private crossing, sustaining Judge Lauder, and in the case of Tierney vs. The Phoenix Insurance Company, from Fargo, Col. Matton, a party in interest, Judge McConnell, is reversed and a new trial ordered. It was held that the judgment annulling the mortgage deed was not proper evidence of the insurance company not having been in the case.

THE ELECTION.

The election yesterday passed off very quietly and only 51 votes were cast. Of these 49 were in favor of the issue of bonds and only two against. The village council will meet this evening and bids will be advertised for at once on the bonds.

The girl that gives way to a desire to gad about the streets, to cultivate the acquaintance of young men and be simpering, is laying the foundation of a useless after life Then two to one when married, she will develope into a shattering gossip, if no greater misfortune befall her It is the girl that loves home and helps her mother that wins the model man and becomes an ornament to womanhood, The girl that does that and devotes some of her time in reading and strives for the grace of mental culture, commands the respect and esteem of everybody, while the gadding street ornament only wins the admiration of those whose admiration is not worth having —Ex.

James Meehan Jr., of Thief River Falls, was in town last Monday doing business with our merchants. The business men of Thief River Falls have been so busy fighting the Meehan's lately that they do not find time to do business so our merchants are in luck and have an excellent market for meat butter knit goods and other commodities.

In the senate yesterday, the rules were suspended, and the bill passed, making Lincolns birthday a legal holiday. The only thing lacking now is Gov' Clough's signature to make it a law, This is well. The American people can well afford to pause one day in the year in their strife for the almighty dollar and draw a little patriotic inspiration from the contemplation of a life as noble and self-sacrificing as Abraham Lincoln's It will exalt the standard of their citizenship. —Crookston Times

We learn that the Great Northern has made another cut in the wages of the operating department of the road, Very naturally the employees do not feel good over it and the Great Northern may again find itself in trouble. The wages at the best are small and a cut at this time will work hardship on the men.

The Brownies In Fairyland.

The Brownies in Fairyland will be given at the Grand Opera House in Crookston Feb 22d and 23d with a matinee Saturday 2.30 p m, This cantata is given by home talent which consists of 50 girls as fairies and 50 boys as Brownies all in complete costumes. The music is bright and catchy and will be rendered by a chorus of over 100 voices Nothing half as elaborate has ever been attempted in this part of the country so no one can afford to let this treat slip by Reserved seats are now on sale and are going fast, those wishing seats reserved in this city should apply early to Miss Mary Kyle who will arrange for same. For further information see small bills and posters.

A SURE THING.

The voting of the bonds yesterday and the canvassing of the town to sell stock has all been favorable and the question of a dam being built here the coming summer —it is certain, to be built We have here one of the finest water powers in the Northwestern part of the state if properly developed which it is sure to be. The facilities for booming and handling logs are unsurpassed on the Red Lake River. The building of the dam will create a pond of 116 acres which will hold many millions of logs. We have taken the first important step in the right direction and it would be a first class sign for us to keep on walking, Let every citizen do his duty and work for his own interest by working for the interest of the town, Let trouble and petty fights alone, and all together with a long steady pull, let us start for prosperity.

St. Hilaire to the Front.

Next Tuesday the citizens of St. Hilaire will vote upon the question of issuing bonds to the amount of $3,000 to aid in construction of a dam and the improvements of the fine water power at that place. The move is good and it is one that St. Hilaire should have had ten or twelve years ago. It would have been a far different town from what it is today had this been done. One of the best water powers on the river is there and it can be improved at a very little cost. Above the water power is also a pocket boom with a capacity for holding several million feet of logs and has sites for saw mill the equal of which do not exist at any other site. If the people St Hilaire wake up to the importance of this fortunate situation and bestir themselves to take advantage of it their town can be made second to no other town in the county —except Crookston, of course. Crookston Times.

An editor who printed a daily paper up in Walsh County once upon a time gives experiance in the Northwest Magazine. Among other notes, he says; Along in the early summer one day Mrs Preutzer wife of the leading druggist went over into Pembina on a visit Now, Mr. Preutzer was one of our few good every-day in-the-week advertisers anything he wanted in this shop went. If his dog had died about that time the column rules would certainly have been turned in next morning's paper,

But Mrs. P's departure escaped the attention of the entire editoral and business force and it went unchronicled. Perhaps we should have remained ignorant even unto this day had not Mrs. Olaf Pederson, a neighbor, gone to Grand Forks on a little visit also a few days later, and a personal appeared to that effect next morning, When I came down to the office along about noon that day, I met Mr. Preutzer just coming out looking sour as a pot of old paste, I greeted him, of course, with the obsequious friendliness our circumstances demanded, but was repulsed with a volley of German-American expletives that staggared me. Then he recited the story of his wrongs in a way that made my hair curl, and when he told me he had ordered his ad out and and stopped the paper my blood ceased to circulate. So did the Post-Bugle. —Ex.

OUR SAINTS.

'Tis not alone from legend and old story,
"Tis not alone from canvas dark with time,
That holy saints, crowned with celestial glory,
Smile down upon us from their height sublime.

Not only from church windows, colored brightly,
Do their blessed shadows fall across our way.
Ah, not alone in niches gleaming whitely,
With folded hands do they stand night and day.

Who is there in this wide world who has not, hidden
Deep in his heart, a picture clear or faint,
Veiled, sacred, to the outer world forbidden,
O'er which he bends and murmurs low, "My saint!"

A face perhaps all written o'er with sorrow,
Whose faded eyes are dim with unshed tears,
And yet they hopefully look toward the morrow
And far beyond it into brighter spheres—

A face whence all the sunshine of the morning
And brightness of the noon have passed away,
And yet, where clearly, surely, there is dawning
The wondrous radiance of that perfect day—

That perfect day, when, crowned with heaven's brightness,
Without a pain or care or mortal need,
With conqueror's palm, in robes of snowy whiteness,
Our blessed shall stand as very saints indeed.

Yes, God be thankful, though the pure saints of story,
And holy martyrs that the artist paints,
Are veiled in radiance and crowned with glory,
There still are halos for these unknown saints.

CUPID AND PSYCHE.

His name upon the ship's books was Edward Braithwaite Colchester, but between Tilbury and Sydney harbor he was better known as Cupid. His mother was a widow, with four more olive branches, absolutely dependent on her own and Teddy's exertions.

At the best of times kindergartens for the children of respectable tradespeople are not particularly remunerative, and the semidetached villa in Sydenham was often sorely tried for petty cash.

But when Teddy was appointed fourth officer of the X. Y. Z. company's steamship Cambrian Prince endless possibilities were opened up.

If you will remember that everything in this world is ordained to a certain end, you will see that Teddy's future entirely depended on his falling in love—first love of course, and not the matter of fact businesslike affair that follows later.

After his second voyage he obtained a fortnight's leave and hastened home. Being fond of tennis and such like amusements, he was naturally brought into contact with many charming girls, who, because he was a strange man and a sailor, were effusively polite.

Then he fell hopelessly in love with a horribly impossible girl, and in the excitement of the latest waltz proposed and was accepted on the strength of a fourth officer's pay, an incipient mustache and a dozen or so brass buttons.

During the next voyage his behavior toward unmarried women was marked by that circumspection which should always characterize an engaged man.

He never allowed himself to forget this for an instant, and his cabin had for its chief ornament a plush framed likeness of a young lady gazing with a wistful expression over a palpably photographic sea.

Now, it was necessary for his ultimate happiness that Teddy Colchester should learn that, like his own brass buttons, without constant burnishing a young lady's affection is apt to lose much of its pristine brightness, and that too much sea air is good for neither. He ticked off the days of absence, and as his calendar lessened his affection increased.

At Plymouth a letter met him, a jerky, inky schoolgirl epistle, evidently written by a writer very cold and miserable, and the first reading stunned him.

Had he seen a little more of the real world he would have been able to read between the lines something to this effect: "You're Teddy, three months away, and I'm madly in love with a soldier."

Then he would have noted that the writer was staying in Salisbury, after which he would have hunted up his home papers and discovered that the Royal Wiltshire yeomanry cavalry were encamped at Humingtoon Down.

But as he had only seen life through a telescope he could not do this. Consequently his pain was a trifle acute.

His mother wrote him four pages of sympathy.

But though he wondered at any girl jilting her boy she could not help a feeling of satisfaction at its being still in her power to transmute three-quarters of his pay into food and raiment for her brood.

Next voyage the Cambrian Prince had her full complement of passengers, and the Kangaroo Girl, whom perhaps you may remember, was of the number.

At Plymouth a little reserved girl joined, and as she is considerably mixed up in this story you must know that she rejoiced in the unpretentious name of Hinks.

For the first week or so Teddy held very much aloof from the passengers, engaging himself entirely with recollections of the girl for whose sake he was going to live "only in memory."

Being an honest, straightforward young fellow, he of course followed the prescribed programme of all blighted love affairs. He began by pitying himself for the sorrow he was undergoing, then went on to picture the future that might have been theirs had she married him, but before they were clear of the bay he had arrived at the invariable conclusion and was pitying himself for pitying the girl who was foolish enough to jilt such an entirely estimable young man as Edward Braithwaite Colchester.

One moonlight night, after leaving "Gib," he was leaning over the rails of the promenade deck feeling sympathetically inclined to the world in general when somebody stepped up behind him.

It was Miss Hinks. She prefaced her conversation with two or three questions about the sea, and he made the astounding discovery that her voice possessed just the note of sympathy he required for his complaint.

He had felt sorry for her because other people snubbed her, and she for him because she had been told exaggerated stories about his love affair. Together they made rather a curious couple.

When, under the supervision of the Kangaroo Girl, the shore party for Naples was being organized, Miss Hinks was tacitly left out. Somehow the impression got about that she was poor, and no one cared about paying her expenses.

But eventually she did go, and it was in the charge of the fourth officer. When she thanked him for his kindness, he forgot for the moment his pledge "to live henceforth only in a memory."

The Kangaroo Girl, on discovering that Miss Hinks had been on shore under the escort of that "dear little pink officer," was vastly amused and christened them Cupid and Psyche.

Now, the end of it all was that Teddy began to find himself caring less and less for the thothumb stained photograph in his locker and more and more for the privilege of pumping his sorrows into a sympathetic ear.

By the time they reached Aden he had convinced himself that his first love affair had been the result of a too generous nature, and that his second was the one and only real passion of his life.

At Colombo Miss Hinks went ashore with the doctor's party, tiffined at Mount Lavinia, dined at the Grand Oriental and started back for the ship about 9 o'clock.

Teddy, begrimed with coal dust, watched each boatload arrive, and as he did his love increased.

On account of the coal barges it was impossible for boats to come alongside. Consequently their freight had to clamber from hulk to hulk. Miss Hinks was the last of her party to venture, and just as the doctor, holding out his hand, told her to jump the hulk swayed out, and she fell, with a scream, into the void.

Then before any one could realize what had happened the barge rolled back into its place. Miss Hinks had disappeared.

Teddy, from half way up the gangway, tore off his coat, leaped into the water, and at the risk of having his brains knocked out dived and plunged between the boats, but without success. Then he saw something white astern and swam toward it.

* * * * * * *

The half drowned couple must have come to an understanding in the rescuing boat, for next day their engagement was announced.

The Kangaroo Girl gave evidence of her wit when she said, "It was fortunate they were Cupid and Psyche; otherwise they would find love rather insufficient capital to begin housekeeping upon."

Teddy wrote to his mother from Adelaide, and she, poor woman, was not best pleased to hear the news. But a surprise was in store for us all.

On the Cambrian Prince's arrival in Sydney Miss Hinks was met by an old gentleman, who, it appeared, was her solicitor. On being informed of the engagement he examined Teddy with peculiar interest and asked if he were aware of his good fortune. Miss Hinks smiled.

Half an hour later we learned that the girl whom we'd been pitying for her poverty was none other than Miss Hinks-Gratton, the millionairess and owner of innumerable station and town properties.

The Teddy of today is a director of half a dozen shipping companies, and he quite agrees with me "that everything in this world is ordained to a certain end."—Pall Mall Gazette.

How to Preserve Old Manuscripts.

The paper or document, after being cleaned or brushed, is washed on both sides with a transparent adhesive solution. Sheets of imported white silk of the most delicate fabric, large enough to give an ample margin or border to surround the document to be preserved, are then placed on each side of the record and pressed. The pressure causes the silk to adhere closely to the document, which is then treated to a coating of paraffin for the purpose of bringing out and making more legible the writing thereon. This process seals the document permanently from any danger of disintegration or fading of the ink, and also is a protection against insects or mice, which might prey upon the ancient records.

How He Tells the Time.

"My father," said the small boy to the woman who was calling on his mother, "is a great man. He knows what time it is without even lookin at his watch."

"What do you mean, Tommy?" queried the visitor.

"Oh, when I holler out an ask him what time it is in the mornin, he allus says it's time to get up. An when I ask him what time it is in the evenin he allus says, 'Time to go to bed, Tommy.' Oh, I tell you my father is a great man."—Waterbury.

A Merciful Robber.

The citizen struggled.

"Let me alone, or I will call the police!" he cried.

The highway robber wavered.

"Do you mean it?" he demanded.

"Yes."

"You will really call the police?"

"Most assuredly."

The outlaw turned on his heel and walked away.

"I don't want to be the cause of his getting clubbed," he said.—Detroit Tribune.

DOCTORED MINERAL WATERS.

Results of an Investigation Recently Made by the Academie de Medecine.

The Academie de Medecine of Paris, as the result of a close investigation of the trade in the so called "natural" mineral waters of France, has arrived at the following conclusions, which are put in the form of recommendations to the legislative bodies:

First.—That the sale of natural waters impregnated with supplementary gases should not be allowed.

Second.—Every application for permit to carry on the business of the sale of natural mineral waters should be accompanied by certificates made before the proper authorities that the waters handled or to be handled by the applicant have not been so prepared—i. e., by supplementary carbonification—and by a further certificate on the part of the owner of the spring or of the source of the water that he has not had recourse to supplementary gasification.

Third.—All reservoirs used for mineral water should be made airtight and should be emptied at least once in every 24 hours. They should be so constructed that the water of the spring flows directly into them, and, further, all bottles and containers should be thoroughly sterilized, and all impurities of every description should be removed before they are offered for sale.

Fourth.—These regulations should be at once imposed, and all proprietors of springs of mineral waters should be forced to put them in practice within three months from date.

In France the recommendations of the academie carry almost the weight of an order, and there is but little doubt but that the above regulations will soon be in force, so far as commercial waters for home consumption are concerned. If they are made to apply to all waters, those for export as well as those for domestic use, there will be a fearful falling off in exports, as it is well known that every single bottle of foreign so called "natural" carbonated waters—not merely those of France, but those of Germany, Austria and other countries—that goes abroad goes charged with supplementary gas. Not merely this, but nearly every one of them is doctored otherwise to an extent that should remove them entirely from the category of natural waters.

Some of the great mineral water companies annually export to America alone millions of bottles of water in excess of the output of their springs. By a strange ruling of our customs officials these manufactured mineral waters have been allowed for years past to come into this country as "natural waters," and thus not merely enter into competition with our domestic products, natural and manufactured, but to "hold the age" on the latter as "the product of nature's laboratory," a fetich of great power among the unthinking multitude.—National Druggist.

THE ABSENTEE VICEROY.

The Irish People Have Just Cause For Complaint Against Lord Houghton.

The latest grievance discovered by the Parnellites is well founded and is calculated to win them general popular sympathy in Ireland. It is that the lord lieutenant is an absentee. It is a fact that Lord Houghton spends as little time as possible in the country from which he draws his salary of £20,000 a year. The Irish people could very well do without his lordship, but they naturally grieve as business men as well as patriots to see that good money is spent out of the country, especially as they have provided it out of funds none too ample at the best times.

Lord Houghton is enormously wealthy, having inherited the bulk of the big fortune of his uncle, the late Lord Crewe, in addition to his own previously large income. He has no personal need of the viceroy's salary, and, if rumor can be relied upon, has no taste for the office. It is not surprising, therefore, to learn that he is contemplating retiring. It is believed that the proposed successor of Lord Houghton was young Lord Drumlanrig, who committed suicide under such sad circumstances a few weeks ago. The government now has some difficulty in finding a Liberal peer qualified and willing to accept the Irish viceroyalty, dignified sinecure though it be.—New York Sun's London Letter.

Spurious Vaccine Points.

Dr. Maximilian Herzog, a young German physician, has set the medical fraternity of Milwaukee by the ears and has incidentally created a sensation in other circles. He has been spending some time in the smallpox hospital there, making investigations and experiments, and announces as a result that a large percentage of the vaccine points used in medical practice are spurious, having been dipped not in a genuine virus, but in croton oil or other local irritant. He has made microscopic and chemical examinations of these points and invites doubting physicians to make the same tests. He is a believer in the efficacy of proper vaccination and is severe in his denunciation of the men who make the spurious lymph, classing them as scoundrels and murderers.—Indianapolis Journal.

One Hope of the Eastern War.

Recent reports from the British consul at Chefu, China, to his government intimate that there is as yet little or no opening for the importation of machinery into China. The Chinese have not yet been convinced of the utility of adopting any modern labor saving machinery. Perhaps one of the effects of the present war may be the enlightening of the Celestial mind and the opening up of China in this respect.

A National Hotel Exhibition.

Amsterdam will have next year an international exhibition of hotel arrangements and accomodations for travelers. Among the features of the exhibition will be an "electric restaurant," without waiters, in which visitors will be served automatically with a complete dinner on pressing an electric button.

HER BONES ARE BREAKING.

Miss Sarah Scott of Fall River Is Suffering From a Singular Disease.

Five years ago Miss Sarah Scott of Fall River was budding into a womanhood that promised an exceptional example of feminine beauty. Today she is a bedridden invalid in whom every physician in New England is taking an interest. She is suffering from osteomalacia, a rare disease of the bones.

Her parents were both healthy, and they have another daughter who enjoys a beautiful face and a splendid physique. About 18 months ago Miss Scott complained of a peculiar soreness in her left thigh. While about to step on a train her thigh bone snapped at the sore spot, and she was carried into a hospital.

The manner of the breaking was so simple that the examining physician's curiosity was at once aroused. After some of the most expert men had looked into the details it was decided that amputation was necessary to prolong the girl's life. Her nerves were in a shattered condition, but the amputation was successful. It was noted at the time that the bone was of a very unusual composition, but no such results as have followed were expected.

After the wound had been dressed and while she was being turned in a hospital bed the doctors and nurses were astounded by the breaking of a bone in her right thigh almost in the exact spot where amputation had been performed on the other leg.

The fracture was treated immediately, and for eight months the girl remained at the institution under the care of physicians who studied the case anxiously. Then the broken limb healed, and the girl was taken home. Her general health did not improve, and she became a great care to her relatives. One of the surgeons at a Boston hospital, who knew of her case, settled in Fall River some months ago and made a close study of the disease as it developed.

Not many weeks ago, while the girl was resting her foot on the floor trying its strength without the support of crutches, the right thigh bone again snapped about where it was previously broken. That necessitated a total confinement to her bed. A few weeks later she was trying to chew a small piece of meat when her left jawbone broke.

This caused a noticeable swelling, and her pretty features now look distorted. Two weeks ago she was trying to fix a pillow under her head, using her left arm to push it into place. She hadn't reached her hand to the back of her head before the bones of the arm just at the shoulder joint seemingly fell apart.

She now lies on her back nursing a broken right leg, a broken jaw and a broken shoulder joint. Her left leg is gone, as stated.—New York World.

THE PRESIDENT'S NEW WORD.

He Got It From Professor Proctor's Story About an Old Kentucky Negro.

President Cleveland has a new word. When any one comes to see him on a matter of business now, he says, "Well, now, let's 'spute' about it." He got the word from a story Professor Proctor, the civil service commissioner, told him of an old negro down in Kentucky who was very powerful in theological controversy and was looked up to by the colored people of that section as the ablest exponent of the Scriptures, white or black, they had ever seen. The old gentleman had worsted all debaters, and, like Alexander, sighed for new worlds to conquer. Professor Proctor, with a party of friends, happened to visit the plantation upon which he lived, and while they were sitting on the piazza one morning the great controversialist appeared with a pair of horn framed spectacles on his nose and a big Bible under his arm. Shuffling up to the steps, he took off his hat, made a low bow, and in a most dignified and respectful manner said:

"Good mawning, good mawning. I done come up to see if any of you all white gennermens ud like to 'spute erbout der holy Scriptures dis mawning."

The president was very much amused by the story and has clung to the word, which he now uses freely at cabinet meetings and in social as well as official conversations.—Chicago Record.

Electrical Moonlight.

The handling of balloons has become part of the regular training of the German soldier, and a captive balloon, kept always in readiness for military work, is now a familiar feature of a German camp. A new arrangement of the electric light is now being tried. From the captive balloon is suspended an electric arc lamp of some 6,000 candle power. As soon as night begins to fall the current, carried by an insulated wire, is turned on, and the light is reflected downward. In this way a large open space is illuminated without lampposts, and the evolutions of a body of troops can take place without impediment by night.—Berlin Letter.

Jail Preferred to Mother-in-law.

Thirty husbands were languishing in the Raymond Street jail in Brooklyn last week charged with failure to support or provide for their wives. It turned out, upon inquiry, that most of these unfeeling men liked their wives well enough, but could not stand their mothers-in-law, and when they had the opportunity of going home, if they would agree to face the reception awaiting them there, they shook their heads resolutely and said, "Let us remain here in peace."—New York Dispatch.

Hugo Still Untombed.

Complaint is made in Paris that Victor Hugo's remains are neglected. When the great man's remarkable funeral was over, the coffin containing his body was solemnly placed on two improvised benches in the Pantheon. There it remains just as it was left, no attempt having been made to prepare a tomb for it. And nothing more is heard of the great Hugo memorial for which subscriptions were solicited just after the poet's death.—Paris Correspondent.

THE ONLY BOWERY.

A THOROUGHFARE THAT IS KNOWN THE WORLD OVER.

It Is the Cosmopolis of Streets—A Few of Its Most Interesting Spectacles—A Mile of Variety Not Surpassed Anywhere on Earth.

The Bowery, New York's famous down town highway of the poor and lowly, is but one of a score of streets where plebeians of Manhattan resort for business by day and for pleasure by night, and it is not more than a mile long, from Chatham square to the Cooper institute. Because of its variety; because it is the main stream into which pour such diverse tributaries as Chinese Pell and Doyers streets, Hebraic Hester and Baxter streets, Italian Mulberry street; because it is so broad and busy by day, so big and brilliant by night; because its name has come to stand for the whole section of which it is the chief artery, that cosmopolitan section of poverty and crime, of appalling distress and garish gayety, the most thickly populated area of ground on earth, has the Bowery become a place of interest to the sociologist as well as to the mere curiosity seeker.

The Bowery, once less cosmopolitan than now, was chiefly celebrated for its haunts of pleasure and for the perils that attended the unsophisticated outsider who sought its joys. In the old days its most conspicuous feature was the dance hall. Those days have passed. The Bowery has its dance halls, where cracked pianos and wheezy violins and ear splitting human voices outrage harmony, and ingenious fancy steps are executed by grocers' clerks and jaunty girls of whom most were born in the country; where sailors dispose of their pay, and where much bad liquor is drunk. But these are few, and the current reforms are likely to make them fewer.

Now, the great feature of the Bowery is the multiplicity of elements that compose the spectacle which it presents. Most of these elements exhibit one thing in common—a struggle for existence, a striving to get bread. The Hebrew "roper in," keeping up in front of his shop the kind of walk that a lion maintains in a cage, endeavors all day long to detain the passerby. The shop window, with its offer of trousers for 69 cents a pair, betrays eagerness to get your coin. The "bum" waylays you and gives you 10 cents' worth of talk in the wistful and unhopeful effort to get 5. The Hebrew theaters, with their hieroglyphic bills, yawn for the patronage of their own race, and not in vain. The long, narrow, cheap saloon, with its sawdust laid floor, invites your attention to the largest glass of beer in the world, which is to be had for 5 cents. The glass is as big as a small keg. A normal man cannot empty it, try as he may, in less than five minutes. They call it a "workingman's friend." More men of leisure—street vagrants and beggars—than workingmen avail themselves of its friendship. You can get whisky, too, in one of these saloons of the cheaper class, rather so called whisky, to stand up against a drink of which is a feat requiring about as great power of resistance as is employed in the circus by the gentleman who catches a cannon ball.

Right next door to where the cheapest liquor on earth is to be had you may sit down at a table with one of the ladies who, between drinks, sing popular songs on the stage at the end of the place, and for the two drinks of execrable whisky that the formidable waiter sets before you you may have the pleasure of paying $1.

Bright spots on the Bowery are the German concert hall, the huge Atlantic Garten, the Volksgarten and others, where good singers are to be heard, and where the language, the drink and the eatables are German, mostly Viennese. Then there are the American variety theaters and the wonderfully prosperous People's theater.

As numerous as the concert halls, saloons, Hebrew stores and theaters are the pawnshops and cheap lodging houses. The "bum" who tours the country by freight in summer abides in Bowery lodging houses in winter, soliciting on the street by day the means of obtaining shelter by night. These men fight or plot for existence hour by hour. Their shifts to get a drink or a free hand at a free lunch counter are sometimes pathetic, sometimes amusing.

Of the girls one sees on the Bowery at night some are employed in factories by day, and some have no means of livelihood apparent to the casual observer. Most of the former are of New York birth, the latter from the country. All have a certain jimpness and finish, however cheap their attire may be.

With its evidences of human distress and poverty, the Bowery yet has some fine stores and some splendid saloons. Not all the liquor imbibed on the street is of the cheap kind.

There are certain places on the Bowery where one may go and be as safe at midnight as he would be on Broadway at noon. There are other places, next door, where a "knockout ball and a touch," a drugged drink and a pocket picking, if nothing more violent, are to be expected as matters of course. The Bowery with its environing section will always be more or less dangerous as long as it remains the final place of resort for starving men. When a friendless man loses everything in New York and has no hope of recuperating his fortunes, he feels naturally drawn toward the Bowery. He seems more in his place there and not as much in contrast with his surroundings as elsewhere. And then the Bowery is nevertheless a gay street. Its general effect, seen at night, is one of magnificence and not of squalor. Its countless lights, its great width and its two lofty lines of elevated railroad, with broad space between, give it this brilliancy and picturesqueness. It is a remarkable street, the Bowery, and to the student of society a deep problem.—Exchange.

LANGUAGE FOR MEDICINE.

An Italian Suggests That Latin Be Used In All Countries.

Decidedly the question of a universal language of medicine is in the air. During the last few months we have had occasion to refer to several proposals of the kind. Now comes another, this time from Italy.

Dr. E. Vitali of Bari has addressed a long letter to the Italian minister of public instruction, Dr. Baccelli, inviting him as president of the international medical congress to propose to the organizing committee that Latin be recognized as one of the official languages at the next (Moscow) congress and as the sole official language at all future congresses, beginning with the fourth from the one held this year in Rome.

Dr. Vitali's argument is, briefly, that while all medical men have some smattering of Latin comparatively few know any modern language but their own. Very few understand all the languages used at congresses, which hence serve to give an idea of the tower of Babel as far as confusion of tongues is concerned. However bad may be the Latin spoken, it will always, Dr. Vitali maintains, be more intelligible than any one modern language to the largest number, and that, after all, is the main point. For any one really in earnest in the matter there need be no difficulty in acquiring sufficient fluency in Latin for the purpose in view.

Dr. Baccelli has sent a diplomatic reply to Dr. Vitali's communication, in which he promises to give the subject proper consideration, etc. There, so far as we know, the matter rests, and there, we imagine, it is likely to rest. There would unquestionably be many advantages in the revival of Latin as the lingua franca of science, nor does the scheme involve any insuperable difficulties.

In an interesting article in The Temple Bar it is stated that the celebrated Dr. Bozzi Granville, when he wished to enter the English navy, had some difficulty about his examination at Haslar, as none of the medical staff spoke any European language but his own. At the suggestion of the surgeon of the Raven, whose communications with his assistant had been carried on in Latin, that language was employed. The Italian doctor passed triumphantly.—British Medical Journal.

AN INCOME TAX CONUNDRUM.

A Knotty Question Under Discussion by the Treasury Department Officials.

A very knotty question has arisen in the preparation of the income tax regulations now under consideration by Secretary Carlisle and Commissioner Miller. It is at what point in the salary of United States official the income tax should be collected. Government disbursing officers are held responsible for the collection of the income tax on salaries paid out by them. Does the law contemplate taxing the salary per se or the person who receives it?

Only salaries above $4,000 are taxable. A case has been put where if the salary is, say, $8,000 per year, and the drawer of it dies after six months, the government receives no income from it unless the disbursing officer takes out the tax pro rata monthly. At this point the difficulty is encountered that the drawer of the salary has not received over $4,000, and therefore no income tax has accrued. If the drawer of an $8,000 salary dies or resigns after receiving slightly less than half of the yearly salary, should the new appointee pay an income tax out of his little more than half of the $8,000 or only on what he himself draws?

It does not seem to strike the treasury officials as fair that one man should pay an income tax on part of the salary drawn by another, and yet if such an amount were drawn $3,900 by one and $4,100 by another man by holding the latter responsible for the income tax on the salary he draws on the excess over the $4,000 the government would receive only 3 per cent on $100. Was this idea contemplated by the law? The same principle applies to all cases of salaries received by United States officials, members of the cabinet, senators and members of congress and others who receive a salary in excess of $4,000.—Washington Post.

Indicted For Using Biblical Quotations.

An unusual thing in connection with the court is the holding by the United States grand jury that Scriptural quotation may be libelous. H. A. Busby of Means, Harrison county, was indicted for writing letters and postal cards to David Handley of this city. On the envelope of the letters were the quotations, "Owe no man anything," "Let us walk honestly" and "Many years thou shalt be troubled." He was indicted on four counts on the ground that the language used was libelous and calculated to injure the character of Mr. Handley.—Columbus (O.) Dispatch.

Bouquets and Circumspection.

That any man can step into a florist's and order a bouquet for any lady is no longer possible in New York. There is a florist, and a very exclusive one, who refuses all orders that do not seem just "conventional," to be very polite about it. An elderly man unknown to the florist was refused a bouquet to be sent to a schoolgirl, and a young sport's greenback was handed back to him when he ordered a box of flowers for a beautiful society leader whom he had admired in her victoria.—New York Herald.

Jack the Ripper Dead?

In connection with young Saunderson's insane crime and the Kensington stabbings the authorities have been extremely alarmed lest another Jack the Ripper scare should seize upon the popular mind. This led them recently to make the important announcement that they have reason to believe that the author of the Jack the Ripper crimes has been several years in his grave.—London Correspondent.

Notice of Expiration

TIME OF REDEMPTION.

STATE OF MINNESOTA, } ss.
COUNTY OF POLK,

Notice is hereby given as required by chapter 194, General Laws of Minnesota for 1885, that each piece or parcel of the real property hereinafter described, was sold at the tax sale of May 2nd to 8th 1892, pursuant to the real estate tax judgments entered in the District Court, in the County of Pokl, on the 21st day of March, A. A Worthy Example.

At the outdoor sports in which the students at our women's colleges indulge, there are no such rough manners, savage struggles or horse play as there are at those in which the students at men's colleges indulge. The stalwart young fellows of Princeton and Yale would gain instruction by observing the athletic sports and games of the gentle young damsels of Wellesley and Vassar and Smith. We don't want the boys to be girls, or the girls to be boys, but we desire that the boys shall be not less regardful of the amenities than are their sisters.—New York Sun.

Will Appear In His Book.

"One of the American characteristics that have impressed me most forcibly, you know," said the Englishman who had just landed, "is the sordid, mercenary view your people seem to take of everything. It shows even in your national hymns. Only an American, you know, could ever have written:

> "Let independence be your boast,
> Ever mindful what it cost.

"Still," pursued the visitor, willing to make every possible allowance, "I expect to find your country quite interesting."—Chicago Tribune.

That Nervous Heroine.

"Tell me honestly," said the novel reader to the novel writer, "did you ever see a woman who stood and tapped the floor impatiently with her toe for several moments, as you describe?"

"Yes," was the thoughtful reply. "I did, once."

"Who was she?"

"She was a clog dancer."—Washington Star.

Made Three Converts.

A branch of the L. L. A. not far from Boston announced for their first public debate the question of woman suffrage. Three young men were assigned the negative and three the affirmative. The three on the affirmative side were opposed to women taking any part in public affairs, but on looking up their arguments in preparation for debate they became converted and spoke with much eloquence and feeling. The judges decided in favor of the affirmative side. Three young men are now added to the advocates of woman suffrage.—Boston Letter.

WEAVER AND COOK.

PEOPLE'S CHAMPION AND PLUTOCRACY'S PREACHER COMPARED.

One Threw Himself Into the Breach In Defense of the Toiler Against the Money Sharks, While the Other Would Disfranchise and Shoot the Common People.

I have just finished rereading a speech delivered in the house of representatives May 10, 1880, on "The People Versus the Privileged Classes," by General Weaver. Always the same enthusiasm for the cause which he represented and for the man himself comes to me when I read that magnificent speech. I want to quote a portion of it for the purpose of comparing it with a speech of Joseph Cook's, to which my attention has been directed. General Weaver said:

> The millionaires of Boston, Philadelphia, New York and Chicago have flooded congress with petitions for the destruction of the greenbacks. One distinguished senator presented a petition, bound in morocco, like a fine family bible, the words "Honest Money" in letters of gold across its back, signed by over 1200 capitalists in New York, praying for the retirement of the greenbacks * * * signed by over 200 names on Fifth avenue, who own in the aggregate more than [illegible],000,000, which pays not 1 cent of taxes and escapes all the burdens of the state. Now contrast this petition with another which I hold in my hand, tattered and soiled with the soot from the hand of the blacksmith, the sweat of the day laborer and the greasy hand of the mechanic. What does this petition ask for? It humbly prays this house to stand between the laborer and the grasping exactions of the money power and prevent the destruction of the greenback which is at once their hope and their defense. The first petition represents those who live upon the labor of others. The last represents that class of our people who produce all the wealth of the country and bear all the burdens. I challenge this house to disregard the petition of these humble people. Refuse their prayers if you dare! Thank God the ballot is still free, and by its instrumentality they will, like a Hercules, hurl you from the power and place which you have so abused and disgraced. The right of petition, if the petitioners are rich and powerful, is not abridged here in this house, but if the prayer comes from the poor and lowly it finds no response, except that of derision and contempt.
> Talk about "good faith," "resumption promises" and "honest money." Why, Mr. Speaker, this silly cry deceives no one. It is an unmitigated fraud, so thinly disguised as to be known and read of all men. There is not a law or a promise in the universe which these men respect. In 1870 they "solemnly" [illegible] an act that the bondholder must have 25.8 grains of gold or 412½ grains of silver for his bond. It was a highwayman's law, but the people concluded to abide by it.

Let me interrupt there to say that I believe there is where the people made a mistake. A contract that is based on injustice is not "sacred" and should be repudiated. The people should have cried out, "Burn the bonds and bounce the bankers!" Had they done this, what untold suffering brought about by the money power would have been prevented! But, alas, alas!

> The people concluded to abide by it. Now, under the hypocritical cry of "honest money," they demand gold only, or a gold dollar's worth of silver for every dollar marked down in their bonds. This would amount to an additional bonus of from 12 to 15 per cent on the entire debt of the nation.

Now, mark the contrast between this servant of the soul pleading for right and justice for the people, and that high priest of Mammon, Joseph Cook, who says:

> Come on with your schemes of confiscation and forced loans and graded income taxes and irredeemable currency, under universal suffrage, and if you are sufficiently frank in proclaiming the doctrines of your ringleaders, then under military necessity, and even here in the United States we must get rid of universal suffrage, and we shall. [Applause.] Rather than allow these things we shall have one of the fiercest civil wars. [Prolonged applause.]

Be careful, Joseph, that when "we get rid of universal suffrage," you do not find yourself disfranchised as a traitor to our institutions, the first and most sacred of which is universal suffrage—so called at least, though it has never yet embraced one-half of the people. A civil war in defense of property is a serious thing. It was tried once in defense of chattel slavery. I think you would do well to pause, review history and take account of stock before you go on in that strain. I venture that in all that audience who applauded you for those treasonable utterances not one in 50 would be ready to shoulder a musket. Would you? I should expect to find you and that audience around looking for some poor wretch driven to poverty by the abominations which you propose to fight in defense of to hire as a substitute.

Come, now, honestly, comparing yourself and your speech with James B. Weaver and his speech, do you not feel dreadfully ashamed? I exhort you to repent before it is too late. Some time the "rich men" will "weep and howl for the miseries that shall come upon them." Perhaps it will be in that "civil war," by which you propose to "get rid of universal suffrage."

CELIA B. WHITEHEAD.

The Government Our Banker.

The president says the government should be divorced from the banking business. Good. But he should have also said that, instead of placing it in the hands of private individuals and institutions, the government should take upon itself the whole scheme of banks and banking in the interests of all the people in the same manner that the postoffice business is managed, not for profit, but for the accommodation of all. The plan is perfectly feasible. I can buy a postage stamp as cheap as Mr. Astor can, and it should be possible for every man who can offer adequate security to obtain a loan from a government bank in any amount and on the same terms as others. Such banks would attract deposits, and being in the hands of the government absolute confidence would result. Money would not be hoarded, but would come out and circulate.—Tax Reformer.

Gold Hoarders.

Henry Watterson accuses the banks of "hoarding" gold. The accusation will apply to everybody else who can get hold of any. The fellow who has a few gold dollars laid aside will be a pretty rich man by and by if the "goldbugs" keep on running the government.—New York Mercury.

PEFFER IN BOSTON.

The Senator Tells an Intelligent Audience Just What the Populist Wants.

Hon. W. A. Peffer was given a recognition by the Mystic Valley club of Boston and made an address which was enthusiastically received. Among other things the senator said:

There are four leading principles in the Populist creed—land, labor, transportation, finance. We believe that the earth is a heritage of the people. We believe that if a child is born into the world he has a right to live here. He is not an outcast. He has a right to a place to earn his subsistence, and he has a right, equal to that of any other person, to enjoy the resources of nature in procuring for himself an honest livelihood.

We do not favor communism in land. There is no need to even think of anything of that kind, because we are not near it. There is now and there will be for centuries to come enough of land to feed all the people that will be here. One acre of land brought to a high state of productiveness is sufficient to support one person. It is monopoly in land that we object to, and it is because of this monopoly that we are agitating land reform.

This monopoly of land is gradually driving the small farmer to the wall, so that today one-third of the farmers of the country are tilling land that belongs to other men, and land monopoly in the cities has brought about the result that 77 per cent of the people are living in rented houses.

A man is not a very good soldier, as Mr. Ingersoll said, when he is fighting only for a boarding-house and not for a home. Our next great idea as Populists is labor. I believe that the right to work is equal to the right to live, and that every willing hand ought to be employed.

We believe further that when a new labor saving machine is invented the people ought to get the benefit of the invention. This labor problem is a most difficult one to be solved. There are two thoughts that will help us to solve it. The first is shorten the hours of labor. Let the displaced men and women have the benefit of the new machines by reducing the hours of labor. Then if you insist on interfering in the disputes between capital and labor interfere on both sides, and, if necessary, let the government take the plant and administer it.

We Populists regard the matter of transportation as very important, and in our opinion, the highways of the people ought to be free. If the government can carry our letters, it can carry our wheat, our corn, our cattle and the things we manufacture. Our Populist idea regarding finance, again, is to get our monetary system out of the hands of a few men.

People are becoming more interdependent, and money is becoming more and more necessary. Why isn't the money out in the country? Why aren't we borrowing more of it? No wonder that the monopolists favor an enlargement of the currency! The Populist party favors a reduction of the rate of interest, because the people cannot afford to pay it and save their homes. We want the government to take charge of our monetary affairs, because we have no right, even if we have the power, to lend money at any particular rate of interest.

Let us get money to the people without the agency of the private banks at all. The people of the United States can organize a monetary system as simple as the postoffice system. We Populists believe we could establish a plan of this kind, with a central loan office at Washington, and as many local branch agencies as may be necessary to meet the needs of the people. The Populists believe that silver is as good as gold, and we insist that there is not enough gold to do the business. We are not repudiators. We do not want to pay in 50 cent money, nor do we want to pay in 150 and 200 cent money, as the gold men want to do.

No Monetary Commission.

For the sake of the suffering millions of your readers let us have no "monetary commission."

The inevitable result would be to take the vital question of the currency and its disease and cure out of the hands of the people's representatives and give it to the gold monometallists and the banks, and they would deal the last fatal stroke to the prosperity of the country.

The attitude of the banks toward the government in the matter of raiding continuously the gold reserve of the treasury for purely speculative purposes is all the indication the country wants as to their utter want of patriotism.

No commission could be appointed which could not be manipulated adversely to the interests of the people. Being wholly irresponsible to the voters of the country, they would be free to work for our would be masters, the gold monometallists.

Let us have a currency based on the credit of the government of sufficient volume to meet the country's needs and down with the delusion that no dollar is honest which has not a dollar's value of gold at its back.

We have about $600,000,000 in gold. Demonetize that, and it would shrink to $400,000,000, which would be about $8 per capita. Even our gold owes 83 per cent of its value to the government stamp and is consequently "fiat money," the hated specter of the oppressors of the people.

For heaven's sake, save us from the monetary commission! Let us have our currency based on the integrity and wealth of the nation.—Cor. New York World.

Money Question In England.

England has a currency question also. It may not be as acute as ours, but the writer—Robert Ewen—of the leading article in the Westminster Review, December, thinks that it is one of much importance nevertheless. The question he presses is quite similar to the one aroused by the Baltimore plan and Secretary Carlisle's plan in this country—namely, shall the currency of the country be issued by banks or by the government itself—and Mr. Ewen is very clear in his mind, and he says that Mr. Gladstone is equally clear that the government should do the issuing. He opens by attributing much of the blame for the depressed condition of trade in England, and "the frequent monetary disturbances, panics and scares" there, to "the antiquated and awkward working money laws of England."

Rules of Good Breeding.

There are two things (among others) of which a well bred woman will not be guilty. One is, crossing her knees in the horse cars or other public conveyance; the second, writing notes on postal cards. The young lady who wears a masculine tailor made gown, and believes her boots are irreproachable, may if she pleases, show them off at home; but one of the first lessons taught in good society is to observe a certain pedal reticence when in the company of strangers. It is not graceful to wag the foot in the face of an unsympathetic vis-a-vis, and when the instep is below par, and the ankle none too round, it doesn't help one to forget and forgive. A certain independent class of girls invariably neglect this branch of their deportment, and somebody should really conjure them to practice a little more coquetry and keep their toes a la Sir John Suckling's poem. As to postal card correspondence, it is bad form, especially when postage is so cheap. Refined and cultivated women do not resort to a card save in cases of great intimacy, where a word or two is sufficient to indicate the wishes of the writer; but to write a familiar note to a distant acquaintance on this useful business postal card is to break one of the instinctively understood rules of good breeding, and to be as guilty of a breach of etiquette as though, when writing to a friend, one signed herself, Mrs. John Smith, instead of with the initials of her own name without a prefix.—Domestic Monthly.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure now known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of Testimonials.

The Beautifying Bath.

The temperature of a beautifying bath should be from 70 degrees to 75 degrees, and it should be of daily occurrence, writes Eloise Perdrix under the title "Little Means Toward Good Looks" in the Ladies' Home Journal. Ordinary water, that is, water neither particularly hard nor soft, is not considered sufficiently cleansing to the skin, and a French firm has lately introduced dainty bags, containing almond meal, oatmeal and orris root to be placed in the water a few moments before the bath is ready. This renders the water very milky and has a wonderfully softening and whitening effect. Baths in which milk, bran or starch has been placed are found to refine or whiten the coarsest, reddest skin if persistently used. Softness and firmness of skin may be obtained by the use of a simple unguent made famous by the Greek and Roman women, who centuries ago set us the example of perfect personal cleanliness as the road to beauty. The following can be made with very little trouble, and it is delightfully exhilarating after the bath: Best white vinegar, one pint; rosemary, rue, camphor and lavendar (of each), two drachms. Let the herbs soak in the vinegar for several hours, then strain. Rub thoroughly all over the body and a deliciously comfortable feeling and a dainty perfume will remain with one all day long.

Back with Rich Trophies.

Last spring we made notice in these columns that Mr. Henry A. Salzer of the John A. Salzer Seed Co., La Crosse, Wis., America's leading seed growers and merchants, was in Europe in search of rare seeds and novelties for the American farmer and citizen.

Judging from their new catalogue, his trip was an eminently successful one. It is brimfull of rare things. Of especial merit we name the Bismarck apple, bearing the second year; the Giant Flowering Star Phlox, the German coffee berry, and for the farmer, the Victoria rape, Germanica Vetch, the Lathyrus silvestris, the Giant Spurry and Giant Incarnate clover, Sacaline, and dozens of other rare things.

This wide-awake firm is in the van, and their catalogue, which is sent for 5c postage, would be cheap at $1.00 per copy.

CURIOSITY OF LUNACY.

Periodical Mania by Which the Patient Lives Three Lives.

There is a special form of mental disease, first described in France, whose definite character is given to it by its periodicity, and hence it is called folle circulaire. In it there are three sections of the mental circle that the patient moves in, viz., elevation, depression and sanity, and in this round he spends his life, passing out of one into the other, for it is, when fully established, a very incurable disease. The patient takes an attack of mania, during which he is joyous, restless, troublesome, extravagant and often vicious. He eats voraciously, sleeps little and never seems to tire. His temperature is a degree or so above the normal, his eye is bright and glistening, he is enamored of the other sex, he shows diminished self-control and no common sense. This lasts for a few weeks, or a few months more commonly, and then he passes sometimes rather suddenly into a condition of depression, during which he is sluggish, dull, looking differently, dressing differently, eating differently, fearful, unreliant and sedentary in habits. This state will last a few weeks or months, and the patient will brighten up into what seems a recovery, and is to all intents and purposes in his normal state. This, again, lasts for a few weeks or months, and he gradually gets morbidly elevated. You find he is passing through every minute mental phase and habit he did at first; depression follows as before, and then sanity; and this round of three states of feeling, of intellect, of violation and nutrition goes on, circle after circle, till the patient dies. He lives three lives.—The Hospital.

A Ring Cut from Diamonds.

Everybody knows how difficult it is even for expert lapidaries to cut diamonds, not only on account of their hardness, but by reason of their structure and veins, which must be well defined before the cutter begins his work. M. Antoine, one of the best known jewelers of Antwerp, has, after many fruitless attempts and three years of arduous, patient toil, at last succeeded in cutting a whole ring out of a block of diamonds. The ring is perfectly round, with a diameter of nineteen millimeters (about three-quarters of an inch). It was exhibited for some time in Antwerp, and was very much admired. Its value is not given, as the maker will not sell it. Outside of this ring there is but one other ring known to be cut out of one stone, and that is the beautiful sapphire ring in the Marlborough collection.

Fall Pasturing Winter Grain.

Some of our Western exchanges are giving opinions about the effect of fall pasturing winter wheat. We have seen wheat that made too heavy a growth in the fall, which was materially benefitted by pasturing with sheep while the ground was dry, and before the frost had injured the feed. Sheep are better for this than any other stock. They are light in proportion to the size of their feed, and their tramping over light, porus soil makes it compact. Then, what they eat off in the fall is only what would be a constant drain on the root whenever the weather is mild. The wheat grower wants a large growth in the fall mainly to get a vigorous root. If the top growth is cut or eaten off the root is none the worse for the fact.

Piso's Cure is a wonderful Cough medicine.—Mrs. W. Pickert, Van Siclen and Blake Aves., Brooklyn, N. Y., Oct. 26, '94.

Over Feeding Fattening Stock.

The heaviest losses in feeding stock that is being fattened are sure to result from feeding in excess. Always leaving the appetite not wholly satisfied is the rule for the best success. Then the food given will be better digested, and the most will be made of the nutrition that it can furnish. Much depends on skill in feeding to get the best results. With a properly diversified ration, including some succulent and less nutritious food, more can be digested than where the more concentrated forms of nutrition are given. Fattening hogs, for example, ought to have some roots, and a daily ration of fine wheat middlings with or before their corn ration. They will eat quite as much corn with this as without it, and will digest it better.

A Neat Trick.

Patrick was one of those witty sons of the Celtic Isle whose amusing sayings had entertained many transatlantic travelers.

One day when the steamer was about leaving port Patrick received the order to haul in a long cable that dragged astern. Patrick jumped to the task cheerfully enough, and hauled away contentedly. But the excessive length of the cable taxed his patience.

"I wonder what's become of the end of this ould cable, anyhow?" And finally, growing impatient he growled out: "Faith, it's no use hauling away at the baste uv a cable. Some divil's cut the end off uv it."—Harper's Magazine.

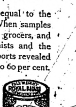
The Second Wedding Gown.

What is the correct wedding dress for a widow bride? asks Lady Violet Greville, a literary belle of London. Shall she compete with her virgin sisters and wear white, or must she e'en take refuge in cool gray, soft lilac or cerulean blue? Hitherto white has been tabooed as the color of innocence, to which the widow, guileful as she is supposed to be, dares no longer pretend. Now, however, we have changed all that. A fashionable woman, marrying for the second time, wore white satin trimmed with sable at her wedding the other day. The charm is broken and other brides will follow suit.

Knew His Business.

"That's the seventh time this morning," said the shoe merchant, as the customer left the store, "that you told me in a tone of voice that couldn't escape being overheard that a woman reminded you of 'Trilby.'"

"Yes," replied the new clerk, "and that's the seventh woman that I've sold a pair of shoes to."—Washington Evening Star.



33 per ct. difference Royal Baking Powder

Strongest, Purest, Most Economical.

As to whether any of the baking powders are equal to the "Royal," the official tests clearly determine. When samples of various baking powders were purchased from the grocers, and analyzed by the United States Government Chemists and the Chemists of State and City Boards of Health, the reports revealed the fact that the "Royal," contained from 28 per cent. to 60 per cent. more leavening strength than the others, and also that it was more perfectly combined, absolutely pure, and altogether wholesome.

As most of these powders are sold to consumers at the same price as the "Royal," by the use of the Royal Baking Powder there is an average saving of over one third, besides the advantage of assured purity and wholesomeness of food, and of bread, biscuit and cake made perfectly light, sweet, and palatable.

The official reports also reveal the presence, in other powders, of alum, lime or sulphuric acid, by which their use is made a matter of grave danger to the consumer.

Whenever a baking powder is sold, either wholesale or retail, at a lower price than the "Royal," it is made from inferior ingredients, probably from alum, and is to be avoided under all circumstances.

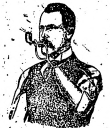
ROYAL BAKING POWDER CO., 106 WALL ST., NEW-YORK.

HAS STEEL FINGERS

WHAT SCIENCE HAS DONE FOR J. COOPER-CHADWICK OF ENGLAND.

Fitted With Artificial Hands, How He Writes, Shaves, Eats and Does Many Other Things, by Using a Pocketful of Tools.

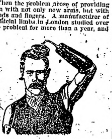
The manufacture of artificial limbs has reached a point where an armless or legless man can do almost as many things as he could do if he were fully equipped by nature says the New York World. This is the case with Mr. J. Cooper-Chadwick of England, both of whose hands were blown off by the accidental explosion of a gun, but who has been so well supplied with artificial limbs that he writes, smokes, buttons his clothes and shaves with as much facility as he did before the accident happened.



Smoking His Pipe.

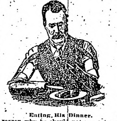
He was one of a band of 600 volunteers under the command of Col. Methuen, of the Scots Grays, raised to fight the Transvaal Boers. In April, 1891, when some thirty miles from Fort Salisbury, Mr. Cooper-Chadwick went out shooting. He rested his gun on the ground and placed both hands over the barrel, when the cartridge was exploded and his hands were blown off. His arms were amputated near the elbow.

Then the problem arose of providing him with not only new arms, but with hands and fingers. A manufacturer of artificial limbs in London studied over the problem for more than a year, and finally devised an elaborate apparatus which enables Mr. Cooper-Chadwick to get along almost as well as he did before the accident occurred.



Brushing His Hair.

One of the first things he did when the new limbs were finished was to write a book. This was called "Three Years with Lobengula," and it consisted of upward of 150 pages of letterpress. All of the manuscript was written by Mr. Cooper-Chadwick with his artificial hand, which held a pen. He now says he is able to write as rapidly as when he used his own hand, and his handwriting does not differ much from what it was formerly. There is no reason why he should not use a typewriter.



Eating His Dinner.

He has been photographed in the acts of writing, smoking, eating his food and brushing his hair. For the performance of these different functions and of multitudes of others required by the ordinary avocations of life, special tools have been provided which fit into his artificial limbs. These tools he carries in a pocket.

Of course the work of providing him with limbs which can do all this work was immensely facilitated by the fact that he already possessed a well-developed arm near the shoulder. At the same time mechanical ingenuity has supplied his wants to a remarkable degree. He can even handle loose coins in his pockets by means of a steel armature made to fit coins of different sizes, while cutting his food and eating his dinner offers to him no trouble at all.

They were speaking of the newer culture in husbandry.

"Well," observed the Oat, with an effort to be cheerful, "you must try to make the best of it."

"And that, in the opinion of many," rejoined the Wheat, "is the wurst."

Mrs. Astor's Beauty.

The late Mrs. Astor's beauty was universally admired. When at Rome Queen Margherita once called her "the most beautiful woman in all Italy." She was tall and stately, and among her accomplishments she counted an ability to speak French, Italian and German fluently. She had a clear, sweet, soprano voice, and the skill to cleverly accompany her songs on the mandolin. In point of dress her tastes were not extravagant. Among her jewels, which were a fortune in themselves, she numbered a collection of diamonds valued at several hundred thousand dollars, and what was reported to be the finest collection of black pearls in existence. The pearls were inherited from Mrs. John Jacob Astor.

HOW I MADE $1,200

By not sowing Salzer's seeds! That is what a jolly farmer said as he entered our sanctum. How is that? Why, says he, Salzer's seeds not only grow but they produce enormously. Had I planted a few acres more of his oats, wheat, corn, potatoes, grass and clover seeds, I would have had to double the capacity of my barns; that would have cost me $1,200. It is a fact that if you want big, rousing farm, grass and vegetable crops, you must sow Salzer's seeds.

If You Will Cut This Out and Send It with 7c postage to the John A. Salzer Seed company, La Crosse, Wis., you will get free a sample of Grass and Clover Mixture and their plant and seed book. wnu

The Monarch's Proposal.

When two thousand young ladies had become quiet, the sultan stepped forward to the center of the stage and having sipped from the glass of water that was ready at hand, addressed the assembly:

"My darlings!" he cried; "be mine! (A Voice: Louder.) Be mine! (Cries of 'hear, hear!') I can never love another. (Sensation and disorder in portions of hall.) You are the first girls— Increased disorder. A Voice: Down in front! Several Voices: Don't shove!) I say you are the first girls I ever loved. All who are in favor of marrying me, say 'aye!' Of contrary mind, 'nay!' The ayes appear to have it. The ayes have it." (Cheers and waving of handkerchiefs.)—Puck.

THE GREAT REMEDY

CURES PAINS OF MAN & BEAST

Minnesota Historical Essays of Interest to School Children.

The following propositions to the school children of Minnesota explain themselves. The nature of the essays desired with the premiums for the same, together with the rules and conditions, are as follows:

First Essay—Best written article descriptive of Minnesota, its history, resources, etc. Not to exceed 5,000 words.

No particular rule or plan is suggested for the preparation of this article, except that statistical tables are not desired, unless brief, totals being preferred; that the style be graphic; that the matter be broken into paragraphs, and made attractive to the eye.

First Prize—Round-trip ticket from St. Paul or Minneapolis to Seattle, Wash., with stop-over privileges at any point on the line: value, $80. An educational journey from the Mississippi river to Puget sound.

Second Prize—The People's Family Atlas, 534 pages; value, $10.

Second Essay—Best written history of the origin and settlement of the northern boundary dispute between the United States and the English possessions in the Northwest, to include an explanation as to how the line is marked, and, incidentally, why some of the main land lies above the forty-ninth parallel, and what states contain territory to be reached only by traveling on alien ground, or else by water. Also to include information about the American railway west of the great lakes running nearest to the international boundary—why it is an important line—and bringing out unusual and interesting events, incidents or peculiarities of each state along the boundary; for example, an explanation why Idaho runs to a narrow point on the north. Not to exceed 5,000 words.

First Prize—Set of Encyclopedia Britannica, a library of twenty-five volumes, nearly 900 pages each, exclusive of 1,500 pages of American additions; value, $60.

Second Prize—Art volumes. Portfolio of 160 views, "Our Country and Our Neighbors;" "Valley, Plain and Peak," of 100 views, and "Atlas of the Northwest," containing fine maps, etc.

Third Essay—Best written account of five important events in the history of Minnesota; five men most closely identified with the history and growth of the state, and of five leading industries or occupations, each to be given in order of importance, and why so. Also such additional incidents relating to the state as the writer may deem of interest and worth, including impressions as to what effect of influence the Northern Steamship line has had in promoting Northwestern commerce. Not to exceed 2,500 words.

First Prize—Round-trip ticket from St. Paul to Buffalo on the steamship Northwest or North Land during the season of 1895. A magnificent tour of the great lakes; value, $28.

Second Prize—Art volumes. Portfolio of 160 views, "Our Country and Our Neighbors;" "Valley, Plain and Peak," of 100 views, and "Atlas of the Northwest."

Rules and Conditions—

1. These offers are open to all pupils or students between the ages of fifteen and twenty years of the common public schools and high schools of the State of Minnesota.

2. It is desired, whenever possible, to have the article typewritten, double space between the lines.

3. All compositions submitted to become the property of the Great Northern Railway company, and to be published in the Great Northern Bulletin, wholly or in part, as thought best. All articles sent in will be given more or less attention in print, with due credit to the authors.

4. When more than one article on the same subject is prepared in the same school the teacher, faculty or committee of pupils will decide as to the merits of the paper to be forwarded. All papers should be read to the school in advance.

5. A committee of three leading educators of the state, whose names will be announced with the decision, will examine and decide as to the best papers and make the awards.

6. Each composition or descriptive article must be accompanied by the blank below, to be properly filled out, and addressed to F. I. Whitney, general passenger and ticket agent, Great Northern Railway, St. Paul, Minn., before the close of the school term of 1895.

Teachers and pupils are invited to write for further particulars and publications.

Danger of Cosmetics.

The use of cosmetics, face powders and rouges cannot be too strongly condemned, writes Eloise Perdrix in the Ladies' Home Journal. They stamp the person using them as silly and vulgar in the eyes of all refined and cultured people, and do not in even the slightest degree enhance or beautify. A good complexion needs no artificial toning or heightening, nature being the cleverest of all artists. A poor skin is kept clogged and its condition impoverished by the application of cosmetics—often, indeed, it is poisoned by the harmful ingredients contained in them. Arsenic and white lead are two of the drugs most used in their preparation and two of the rankest poisons which can introduced into the system. Medical treatment for the beautifying, preserving and improving the complexion should only be undertaken under the direction of one's family physician.

Grooming for the Cows.

Horses have much more often been made pets than cows have been. So far as grooming goes the average cow gets very little of it except what she can do for herself by rubbing her shoulders and neck against the sides of the stable in which she is confined. Try a curry comb and brush on the cow as well as on the horse. Unless the cow is very thin the curry comb will be liked even better than the brush. The dirt in a cow's hair is always liable to get into the milk pail, as it is brushed out when the milker rubs up against the animal in getting out of the narrow stall.

YOUNG SPIRITS,

a vigorous body and robust strength follow good health. But all fail when the vital powers are weakened. Nervous debility and loss of manly power result from bad habits, contracted by the young through ignorance of their ruinous consequences. Low spirits, melancholia, impaired memory, morose or irritable temper, fear of impending calamity and a thousand and one derangements of body and mind, result from such pernicious practices. All these are permanently cured by improved methods of treatment without the patient leaving home.

A medical treatise written in plain but chaste language, treating of the nature, symptoms and curability of such diseases, sent securely sealed in a plain envelope, on receipt of this notice, with 10 cents in stamps, for postage. Address, WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N.Y.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

WATER SPIDERS.

Their Taste Inclines to "A Life on the Ocean Wave."

Some of the spider family have a liking for living in or near the water. Most of the spider family with which you are familiar live in the corners of rooms or in dark closets, but this water spider has quite a curious home, and if you look sharp you may find one of them some day on the banks of a stream.

This curious little spider builds a pretty house of silk about the size and shape of a thimble. This house is fastened among the water plants growing under the water, and naturalists tell us that when her house is finished the spider carries air in her body, bubble by bubble, until she fills her tiny house under the water full of air. In this house she lives, carrying her food down there to eat, and making her nursery in one corner of the house. And her children live until they grow big enough to build little thimble castles for themselves.

Another curious little fellow is called the raft spider. This creature constructs an odd little raft of leaves and sticks, held together by the silken threads which all spiders use. On this raft the spider sails about, not stopping in any one place, but steering his little boat wherever the fancy takes him. His food consists of small insects which he finds in the water around him. He is said to be able to run upon the water as well as sail upon it, so altogether he is quite an accomplished creature. His little raft is his home, his castle, his yacht and his nursery, and he doubtless finds "a life on an ocean wave" quite to his taste.

THE HAYWARD TRIAL

THE GING MURDER TRIAL ON AT MINNEAPOLIS.

Charles Blixt, the Self-Confessed Slayer of the Girl, Takes the stand and Goes Into Details of the Crime. Blixt Breaks Down and Sobs Like a Child.

Minneapolis, Feb. 16.—It was the defense's turn in the Hayward murder trial, and there was eager curiosity on every side to learn what tack Mr. Erwin and his assistants had elected to pursue. To the layman, now that the state has rested, all looks equally dark and forbidding, but the defendant himself had no such thought. His demeanor upon entering the court room this morning was positively jubilant, and he looked the picture of confidence. He nodded to some lady friends in the front row, and then, espying his mother, went up to her and said: "Good morning, little mother," and kissed her upturned lips.

When John Day Smith arose to address the jury in his deliberate and emphatic fashion, Harry faced squarely around to the jury and scanned their faces as the words fell from the lips of his counsel. Before the court opened he found time to tell the reporters that the report in a morning paper to the effect that he had remarked, "They are going to hang me," was absolutely and unqualifiedly false, and that he had never given utterance to any such statement.

Talks to the Jury.

After the usual prefatory remarks about the jury system, Mr. Smith called attention to a number of things the state had promised at the outset to prove and which it had not proved. It had not shown that Hayward had secured all of Miss Ging's money, as she had a balance in the bank at her death; it had not shown that he had gone riding with her the Wednesday and Saturday evenings before the murder, as promised. Mr. Smith declared that the insurance transactions, the acquiring of an insurable interest, and the waivure of the assault clause of which much had been made by the state were all in the ordinary course of business, and not in any way unusual. The sweat box method of wringing so-called confessions from BXlixt and Adry Hayward were adverted to in denunciatory terms. The defense admitted that Harry was a gambler, and deplored the fact; but asserted that he was not on trial for gambling, but for murder.

"Harry Hayward comes into this court," concluded Mr. Smith, "confronted by the testimony of a brother whose heart is filled with deadly enmity, and Blixt, who with perjured tongue has sought to conceal, and shield his real confederate. All we ask is that the sunlight of God's truth shall be let in on this most remarkable case."

Says 'Twas Harry.

Minneapolis, Feb. 17.—M. D. Wilson gave Damaging evidence against Harry Hayward. Mr. Wilson said he lived at 1904 Kenwood boulevard. He was a horse dealer and was at his barn Dec. 3 last at 308 Twelfth street south. He knew Mr. Goosman and had seen Mr. Sweetser a week ago last Sunday. Mr. Sweetser had tried to find out what Wilson had seen that night, but the latter refused to tell him. He had left his barn at 7:10 and had gone directly home that night. He had seen the Ging rig at the corner of Kenwood boulevard. They came off Lyndale avenue north and turned onto the boulevard and came upon his rig face to face. He was in the middle of Kenwood boulevard and just crossing Lyndale and the rig turned right in aside of the witness and drove with him about two blocks. He then drove home.

"How many were there in the rig?" asked Nye.

"Two," said Wilson, "a man and a woman."

"Did you know them?"

"I knew the woman."

"Who was it?"

"Miss Ging."

"Did you know the gentleman?" asked Nye. Despite Erwin's objections, the witness was obliged to answer.

"To the best of my belief it was the gentleman sitting behind Mr. Erwin (Harry Hayward.) I picked him out the next morning."

"That's all," said Nye.

"What time was it?" asked Erwin.

"It might have been 7:20."

"Are you sure that's the man?"

"Well, I saw him as plain as I see you now. The moon was shining full in my face."

"Did you see Blixt there?"

"No, sir."

Gap of Eleven Minutes.

The next most interesting matter developed was the testimony of C. J. Bartleson, at whose house Harry Hayward was a frequent visitor. The testimony of this witness is essentially important to the alibi claims of the defense, but in itself it does not establish an alibi. Mr. Bartelson testifies positively that Harry Hayward arrived at his house between 3 and 5 minutes to 8 on the night of the murder. The accused bore no evidence of having encountered an exciting experience, and, while waiting for Miss Mabel Bartelson to go to the theater, conversed with Mr. and Mrs. Bartelson in a perfectly natural manner. This was the effect of the Bartelson testimony. It leaves Hayward eleven minutes to account for between the time he left Adry's room and his arrival at the Bartelson residence. In this time, the state contends, he reached the boulevard, conversed with Blixt as the latter has stated, and reached Chestnut avenue without having prespired in the least.

This leaves a very narrow margin, and the defense claims ability to account even more closely. Great reliance is placed on this phace of the defense. It is the strongest point that can be made in Harr's favor. The state holds that eleven minutes is all the time necessary to have accomplished all Hayward is said to have done that night.

The Fatal Shot.

Mrs. O. E. Naegle, a sister of William Erhart, and who lives out west of Lake Calhoun, was called. She remembered the evening of Dec. 3. Her husband got home that night at 7:30. He ate supper alone, the family having finished the meal. Later both Mr. and Mrs. Naegle went into the front room, which faces Excelsior avenue. As the witness sat reading she heard a shot fired. It was between 7:50 and 8:10 o'clock.

Harry Hayward said this morning that the absence of any distinct line of defense in the opening speech of John Day Smith yesterday was by no means an indication of weakness, as the public seemed to think.

"Do you mean by that to indicate that there is sensational evidence to come?"

"That is just what I mean," replied the accused. "There will be some facts brought out that may astonish people."

The crowds in attendance have diminished somewhat in size, but are made up of the usual proportion of women, who exhibit the most morbid curiosity, and even sympathy for the handsome defendant. Some of the petticoated contingent will go to any length to get a word with him, or an autograph or a handkerchief for a souvenir.

Bad For Hayward.

Minneapolis, Feb. 19.—In the opinion of all Harry Hayward is nearer the gallows than he was last Wednesday afternoon, when the last witness for the prosecution left the stand.

The question is: What has the defense accomplished since the prosecution closed? Nothing; in fact, worse than nothing. Erwin has unwittingly dragged his client deeper into the mire. One of his own witnesses has sworn that he saw Harry Hayward with Miss Ging on the night of the murder. They were together on Kenwood boulevard, and in the buggy from which the woman's lifeless body was cast upon the frozen ground of Excelsior road.

Another of the attorney's witnesses—one chosen to establish an alibi—testified that Harry bowed to him in the foyer of the Grand opera house in a manner which at the time excited surprise, if not suspicion.

Three medical experts were introduced. In the opinion of two of them Miss Ging's injuries could have resulted in the manner Blixt described. The other witness said that it was quite impossible. His reasons were that there were so many points of attack, and that the injuries were too extensive to have been produced by a fall of three or four feet. This evidence does not fit in anywhere; it is wholly isolated.

When Miss Wachter went to the stand there was promise of sensational testimony. It was spoiled by Mr. Nye, who interposed an objection which the court took under advisement. The point raised was that Miss Wachter, as Mr. Odell's stenographer, is a party to all confidences between the client and his attorney. It was a nice technicality, and upon Judge Smith's disposal of it rests some important testimony.

It is very noticeable that the crowds in attendance upon the trial are growing smaller. Interest in the case has begun to flag since the defense began its campaign.

A WINDOW SMASHER.

Mary Sweeney Is Detained at Fond du Lac, Wis.

Fond du Lac, Wis., Feb. 19.—Mary Sweeney, the window smasher who has been in a dozen insane asylums, and who has broken windows in a score of Wisconsin and Minnesota towns, is detained here. She was liberated from an asylum at St. Peter, Minn., Feb. 7 on condition that she would return to Wisconsin. She was given a ticket to Wausau. On her arrival there she was taken in charge by the authorities who intended to commit her to the Oshkosh asylum. But Mary wrote to Dr. Jones, president of the state board of control, stating that she had recovered her reason, and he said he would release her if she was committed. The Wausau officials bought her a ticket to Fond du Lac. She took a morphine cure while at St. Peter.

A few years ago this woman visited Oshkosh, Ashland, Eau Claire and other cities at different times and before she could be apprehended broke many plate glass windows, resuming the work of destruction as soon as she was liberated from captivity. She had an uncontrollable mania to break glass which cost leading merchants a great deal of money.

KNIGHTS OF PROTECTION.

New Patriotic, Benevolent and Fraternal Order.

St. Paul, Feb. 19. — The American Knights of Protection is a new patriotic, beneficial and fraternal order that has commenced work in this state—an assembly of which order is now ready for institution in the First ward in St. Paul, and another at Duluth. The purposes of the order comprise fraternity, national patriotism and an adherence to the doctrine of protection for American industries through a protective tariff and foreign immigration restrictions, and to the family and home through a co-operative beneficial system.

Gen. Cyrus Bussey of Washington, D. C., late assistant secretary of the interior, is the national president; Hon. Charles L. Wilson, of the Baltimore bar, is the national secretary, and Hon. J. B. Robinson, member of congress from Media, Pa., late president of the State League of Republican clubs, is the national counselor. The declaration of principles of the new order is absolutely non-sectarian.

INTEREST ON LAND CONTRACTS.

Interesting Opinion by Attorney General Childs.

St. Paul, Feb. 19.—Attorney General Childs has given an opinion concerning the rate of interest that can be lawfully collected from the holders of delinquent state land contracts. He interprets the act of 1893 as relieving the holders of contracts drawing 7 per cent interest by requiring them to pay only 5 per cent interest. This opinion is of considerable importance to the holders of delinquent contracts, purchased many years ago at a 7 per cent rate of interest. Heretofore they have been regularly paying 7 per cent interest, regardless of the act passed in 1893 reducing the latter to 5 per cent.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

WORK OF THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings in the Senate and House, Comprising a Brief Summary of the Week's Business.

St. Paul, Feb. 14.—In the senate the following bills of general interest were introduced:

A bill to amend the laws relating to the inspection of steam vessels and steam boilers.

A bill to furnish grass seed for distribution in certain counties.

A bill to provide for the erection of a plant for the manufacture of hard twine at the state prison. $25,000 to be appropriated therefor.

The following bills passed:

An act to require the filing of notice in certain condemnation proceedings with the register of deeds.

An act to amend section 7, chapter 98, General Laws 1887, relating to drainage of wet and overflowed lands.

An act proposing an amendment to section 10 of article 7, of the constitution of the state of Minnesota, relating to the elective franchise.

An act for the better protection of laboring and material men.

An act to amend subdivision 10, section 310, of chapter 66, of General Statutes of 1878, as amended by chapter 34, General Laws of 1885, relating to property exempt from execution.

An act to appropriate money for the state public school.

An act to amend an act relating to labels, trade marks and advertisements.

At five o'clock an adjournment till Friday at 10 a. m. was taken in order to allow the members to visit the reform school at Red Wing.

St. Paul, Feb.—The following bills were introduced in the senate:

Provides for mineral inspection and to inspect quarries. A substitute bill for S. F. No. 226, and places the inspection under the control of the labor department.

To amend section 11, chapter 20, General Laws of 1893, relative to the fees of state oil inspector.

To prevent commitment to county jail for violation of town or city ordinance.

To authorize the warehouse commission to sell the property for the elevator site at Duluth.

To prohibit public shows and exhibitions on the Sabbath day and to provide penalties for violation; fine between $50 to $100 or imprisonment 20 to 90 days.

To provide for a constitutional amendment providing for the state school funds in city and county boards in accordance with suggestions contained in Gov. Nelson's message.

To enable the investment of the school funds in the bonds of any state, the bonds not to bear less than 3 per cent interest.

The following bills were passed in the senate:

S. F. 146—To amend section 35, chapter4, General Laws of 1893, relating to elections, and introduced by Senator Heneman, was passed by a vote of 32 to 1.

S. F. 70—To authorize the division of organized towns by boards of county commissioners, in certain cases, introduced by Senator Hodge, was passed by a vote of 32 to 0.

S. F. 144—To authorize county commissioners and treasurer to audit and pay moneys for the construction of a ditch, drain or water course, etc., introduced by Senator Larson, was passed by a vote of 33 to 0.

S. F. 82—To amend section 1, chapter 168, General Laws of 1889, relating to drainage of lands, introduced by Senator Peterson, was passed by a vote of 30 to 0.

S. F. 83—A similar curative bill from the same author, was passed by a vote of 32 to 0.

S. F. 133—To amend chapter 11, General Statutes of 1878, relating to assessment and collection of taxes, was passed by a vote of 32 to 0.

The next bill on the calendar was the anti-pool room bill. It is known as S. F. 138, to prevent pool-selling and bookmaking, and was introduced by Senator Stevens. It is a stringent bill. It was passed by a vote of 31 to 1.

H. F. 16—To amend chapter 147, the same being an act granting a reward for killing wolves, introduced by Representative Gunn, was passed by a vote of 30 to 1.

H. F. 184—The bill appropriating money for a deficiency for examining, appraising and selling lands and timber for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1895, was passed by a vote of 32 to 1.

The house was not in session.

St. Paul, Feb. 17.—Gov. Clough sent in a communication to the senate declining to send in the report of the capitol experts to the senate. The governor suggests that the senate appoint a committee of not more than fifteen to examine the document and report to the senate

The senate decided to have the committee appointed. The senate passed the following bills, among others:

To amend section 6, chapter 62, Statutes of 1878, relating to divorce. It makes excessive use of drugs and narcotics a ground for divorce.

To authorize organized towns to build fences for the purpose of preventing the spreading of the Russian thistle.

To amend section 467 of the penal code, relating to receiving deposits in insolvent banks.

Senator Ilits offered a resolution for the appointment of a joint committee to investigate the matter of locating the Birch Coulie monument. The resolution was adopted. The senator from Carver also submitted a communication and some resolutions from the Sixth Regimental association, announcing that the monument had been located in the wrong place.

In the House.

Representative Staples, who occupied his seat in the house instead of one of the trains to Red Wing, introduced a resolution instructing the chief clerk of the house to procure badges for members of the legislature who go on legislative junkets to state institutions.

Robbins—To appropriate $200 for the distribution of the printed histories of Minnesota troops in the Civil and Indian wars.

Blagik—To provide for taxation of mortgages on real estate.

Sederberg—To provide the manner of bonding counties to raise money for indebtedness for improvements.

Sander—Regulating the amount of license for the sale of cigarettes, said license to be $500.

Lockwood — To establish a normal school at Pipestone and to provide buildings for the same by an appropriation of $40,000.

St. Paul, Feb. 19.—The senate held two sessions. The large number of bills that had accumulated on general orders furnished lots of work, and many of the bills were important. Three of them provide for changes in the constitution; one relating to taxing sleeping car, telegraph and telephone companies, and another to authorize the investment of the $12,000,000 school fund in county, city, village and town bonds. The morning session witnessed the introduction of several bills of general interest and a protracted discussion over the Potter resolution, directing the finance committee to hold all bills requiring an appropriation until an omnibus appropriation bill could be prepared and introduced. The resolution was shelved temporarily, but a further move in the same direction is predicted for this week. Senator Morgan introduced a stringent bill forbidding discrimination against members of labor organizations. Senator Yale introduced a bill that would enable railroad and other corporations to condemn streets in the same manner as they may private property. Senator Theden proposes to prohibit the employment of drinking men by railroads and other transportation companies.

In the House.

The pine land investigating committee's bill was introduced by Mr. Staples and ordered printed. It is a complete revision of the land laws of the state, and has been carefully prepared. Dr. Zier proposed a constitutional amendment providing for a board of pardons, and in another bill seeks to abolish the death penalty as punishment for murder.

Mr. Mathieson introduced H. F. 365, to appropriate $2,000 annually to be used in encouraging the dairying industry by disseminating information making exhibits of dairy products, paying premiums and publishing the annual reports of the meetings of the state dairymen's association.

Mr. Feig introduced H. F. No. 372, to provide for the appointment of a state entomologist at the state experiment station and to appropriate $5,000 annually for its support. The salary of the state entomologist is limited to $1,000 per year and is to be filled by a board of regents of the state university. His principal business is to destroy the chinch and other bugs and insects that are injurious to the crops of the state.

Mr. Brevig introduced another female suffrage bill, this one to give the women the right to vote on bonds issued for municipal or school purposes.

H. F. No. 373, introduced by Mr. Cross, seeks to amend the law relating to the salary of the supreme court reporter by cutting off the increase in his emoluments which were added in 1893.

H. F. No. 362, introduced by Mr. Brevig, is a long document proposing changes in the railroad laws, which, it is understood, was prepared by J. H. Burke. It is an extreme measure. It was referred to the railroad committee, and will probably never be read.

Mr. Gibbs introduced a bill which is a curative act for the country elevator bill passed two years ago. It was prepared by Chief Grain Inspector Clausen, and is intended to remedy the few existing evils at and in connection with country warehouses. The principal change relating to railroads is that depot grounds are placed on the same footing as right of way in case of application for an elevator site.

Taken in Tow.

Halifax, Feb. 19.—The steamer St. Jerome, Capt. Pugh, from Galveston for Liverpool, which arrived here this morning, has in tow the steamer Salisbury, from Mediterranean ports, thirty-nine days out, bound for New York, fruit laden. The Salisbury was picked up Feb. 13 when about 250 miles south of this port flying signals of distress. Her coal was all gone and she had consumed all available woodwork, including the main topmast. The crew were completely exhausted when the St. Jerome came to the rescue and took the Salisbury in tow.

BRANDING A CLAIM FALSE.

World's Fair Officials Expose a Pretender to an Award.

A most discreditable result of the late Chicago World's Fair is the fraudulent advertising of awards never received, by a Chicago baking powder firm. Officials of the Exposition are much incensed, and have notified the offending parties that the mis statements must cease. They are defied, however, by the Chicago concern, who continue to advertise the false statement that they received the highest award for strength, purity and excellence, Mr. Thatcher, chief of Agricultural Awards, shows in his letter that the awards granted were "for an exhibit of baking powder," merely, not for superiority; while the Judge of Awards on Baking Powders writes a letter saying that "no such award was given to the Chicago company," as the company claims and advertises.

Another fact in connection with the baking powder business at the Chicago Fair has come to light: The identical baking powder made by the Chicago concern, and so brazenly advertised as having received the highest award for purity and excellence, it now appears was found by the analysts who made the tests at the Fair to contain traces of ammonia and sulphates.

The officials believe that though they may be powerless to stop the misleading publications of which they complain, the quick wit of the people will doubtless detect the spurious claims and be able to apply the proper remedy.

A Cat at a Ball!

At the annual charity ball in New York Thursday night an amusing incident happened. Just as Gov. Morton and Mrs. Chester Griswold, who opened the ball, appeared upon the floor, a large black cat made its appearance. The frightened animal made a dash in the direction of the governor, and there was immediately a roar of laughter from all assembled. This frightened the poor thing still more, and, changing his direction, he made for the members of the floor committee, who were solemnly marching in four abreast. Of course these dignitaries were not afraid of a little thing like a cat, but they did not want to be made too ridiculous, and so they broke ranks and stepped aside. The cat hid under some chairs, and then society in general amused itself by watching one member of the committee attempt to catch the intruder under a borrowed high hat. It was fully five minutes before the cat was removed. Another amusing incident of the ball was the failure of the man who gave out hat checks, just inside the doorway, to recognize the governor. As the latter came in he was accosted by the official and informed that he was required to get a hat check, and must pay his 50 cents for it. The governor started fishing in his overcoat pocket for some change, when his identity was disclosed to the zealous official. The latter was greatly chagrined.—Troy Times.

Cold Walk for Her Wedding Day.

A romantic story comes from the town of Parsons. Samuel Collenback and Miss Ada Parker were engaged to be married in the village church on Wednesday evening. The groom minister and guests were in waiting. The bride failed to appear. After waiting half an hour the guests dispersed and the church was closed. At 10:30 o'clock the bride arrived home in an exhausted condition. She had walked all the way—five miles—from Wilkesbarre. She had gone to the latter place early in the evening to see a dressmaker who had disappointed her in not having her trousseau ready. Miss Parker thought she could get to church in time, but when she tried to do so she found the great snowstorm had blockaded the railroads and electric car lines. She then determined to walk. Arriving in Parsons she aroused the groom and the preacher and, proceeding to the church, they were married in the presence of witnesses by Rev. F. Kiernan.—Philadelphia Record.

A Microbe That Is Hard to Kill!

Professor Renk, who is engaged in making some interesting experiments on the vitality of the common bacili, the so-called "microbe of cholera," has just finished a treatise containing his observations on the ability of such organism to withstand intense cold. He has found, that they will live for some time, and exhibit all their usual liveliness in a temperature ten degrees colder than freezing. A single "culture" of these germs in a bowl of beef broth, reduced to a temperature of from five to seven degrees below the zero of the centigrade thermometer (which is about the same as twenty to twenty-three above the zero mark of the Fahrenheit instrument) were unusually alive at the end of 100 hours' exposure. He found, however, that as they were uninterruptedly exposed to such a degree of cold for a longer period than that mentioned above they gradually lost vitality, and at the end of five days were perfectly lifeless and utterly unable to do damage should they be taken into the human system.—St. Louis Republic.

Consumptives Ordered to the Pest House.

Cincinnati, Ohio, Feb. 18.—Dr. W. R. Amick, the eminent consumption specialist of this city, has created a national sensation by his decided opposition to the order of the hospital authorities to send 100 consumptives to the smallpox pest house. His experience in the institution convinces him that it is unjustifiable and brutal. He has, through his attorneys, entered protest, and in the Cincinnati Tribune presents a formidable array of scientific facts against the contagion theory of consumption which covers that theory with ridicule. A hot newspaper controversy is the result. The Amick Chemical company, compounders of Dr. Amick's remedies, is mailing free to physicians, consumptives and all applicants extra copies of the Tribune containing explanatory charts of his theory.

ENTERTAINMENT.

H. C. Ritson's Stereopticon Entertainment will be given in the St. Hilaire M. E. Church on Monday evening Feb. 25th, This entertainment is one of the very best of the kind, coming highly recommended. Admission 15 cents, children 10 cents.

A man by the name of Ed Brown came to a farmers house on the function east of Wyanoette last Saturday badly frozen. He had started from Grand Forks to walk to the pineries at Red Lake and became lost for forty-eight hours. Both legs were frozen badly and one arm and hand He was brought in here last Monday and was sent to the county hospital.

George Ralph came down from the Red Lake country last Friday where he has been surveying for the government Mr. Ralph has been engaged to draw the plans and engineer the construction of new dam He spent several hours looking over the field and will be here again this week to make exact measurements Mr Ralph is an experienced surveyor and he will without doubt give us some good work.

Eight or ten farmers have already commenced hauling stone for the new dam and several cords are already on the spot, By the last of this week there will be in the neighborhood of thirty farmers at work. Six hundred cords are wanted and all who have stone on the farms can make fair wages.

S. M. Dainard has taken the contract to get out all of the timber for the new dam and already has a force of men and teams at work. The contract calls for 150,000 of lumber to be out and he is making arrangements to get a portable sawmill to do the work, The number is to be cut before May 15th 200,000 feet of piling and cribbing logs will also be cut and banked on the river before April 1st This will necessitate some hard work but Sam seems equal to the task.

Don't expect an advertisment to bear fruit in one night, says the Building Advocate. You can't eat enough in a week to last you a year and you can't advertise on that plan either. People who advertise only once in three months forget that most folks cannot remember anything longer than seven days If you can arouse curiosity by advertising, it is a great point gained, The fair sex don't hold all the curiosity in the world, Quitting advertising in dull times is like tearing out a dam because the water is low.

A number of the farmers in this part of the county have signified their intention to raise less wheat. At the prevailing prices of that commodity there is hardly a decent living for the producer and if he happens to be in debt, and a majority of the northwestern farmers are, the question of living becomes a most serious one. Here, where expensive machinery is needed, and with no provision made to care and house it during the long winter months, a majority of the farmers are kept continually debt to machine houses, It is only a question of a few years when the great majority of our farmers now settled upon our broad and fertile prairies will either have to diversify their crops or lose their farms, Many have already commenced, and with good results.
—East Grand Forks Courier,

Last night's train brought to Crookston the rotund form of H. E. Ives who was feeling very good over the flattering prospects for the future of St. Hilaire, Mr. Ives has long cherished a scheme for developing the water power at that point and of late has redoubled his efforts and now success has crowned his work and articles of incorporation will be filed with the secretary of the state this week. The company will be known as the St Hilaire Boom & Water Power Co and its object is to exercise the functions which the name implies, The company will be capitalized in the sum of $50'000 and will control all shore rights on the Red Lake River from St. Hilaire to Thief River Falls, assuming the rights formerly owned by the St Hilaire Boom & Navigation Company which was organized in 1883, The officers are H. E. Ives, president and general manager; J. E. Lee, Minneapolis, Vice Pres; O. F Post St. Hilaire, Sec. and Treas,; and these officers together with Fred Eikhoff of St Hilaire and W. F, McKenzie compose the first board of directors St. Hilaire has voted bonds as a bonus to the enterprise to the amount of $3,000, and one quarter of the stock has been subscribed for by the citizens of that enterprising town, Considerable has been taken by Crookston and Minneapolis parties and the company will be able to place the remainder without trouble as the showing they make makes the investment one which recommends itself, There is probably no other place on the Red Lake River where the booming facilities equal those at St. Hilaire, Millions of feet of logs can be stored in pockets and leave the stream free for driving at all times. Work on the new dam has already begun, S. M. Dainard has taken contracts for getting out 150,000 feet of lumber and 200,000 feet of piling and boom timbers and is hiring men and teams with the intention of getting the work done before spring. Three hundred cords of stone are contracted for and a like amount will be needed in addition to fill the crib with The improvement will be one which will eventually bring in some large lumbering mill negotiations are now pending looking to the establishing of a plant by a Wisconsin firm which will bring a large amount of capital.—Crookston Times

No One Has the Courage to Answer Sibley's Attack Upon Cleveland.

Such a defeat as the Democrats suffered on the closure rule would have dissolved the English parliament at once. It would have been taken as a vote of a want of confidence and driven the administration to resign or appeal to the people. In this regard we are far behind our British cousins, since in America our national lawmakers will hold on to their job no matter whether they are in accord with the people or not.

The present administration is absolutely held in contempt among the people as well as among the prominent men of the Democratic party. No better evidence of this fact is wanted than the applause which greeted Congressman Sibley's terrible arraignment of President Cleveland and his followers. His attack was applauded by Democratic members of the house, and no one has been found with courage enough to challenge the truth of his assertions. It was an open secret during the contest over the repeal bill that the administration was using its patronage in forcing this measure through. Under no other hypothesis could these unexpected changes be accounted for. In fact, it was generally charged that such was the case, and we venture the prediction that Mr. Sibley will not be questioned further upon the matter.

President Cleveland should be impeached, and every fair minded man will give consent to this proposition. He has become a law unto himself and is trampling all other laws under his feet. He has usurped the prerogatives that belong to other branches of the government, and in so doing has brought about a state of affairs bordering on anarchy. He has made himself a king, in fact, and today is exercising a power that even the czar of Russia would hesitate before assuming. There is not a crowned head in Europe that would not be hurled from his throne should he assume to set aside the laws and defy public opinion as has Mr. Cleveland for the past two years. The entire aggregation of ignorance, corruption and assumption should resign at once and give the great plain people of this country the opportunity to re-establish the republic upon its ancient principles.—National Watchman.

Demonetization of Silver.

TO THE EDITOR:—State briefly the history of the demonetization act of 1873.

A READER.

This bill originated from a request made of congress by Mr. Boutwell, then secretary of the treasury, that the coinage and mint laws should be thoroughly revised. The bill was drafted under the direct supervision of the comptroller of the currency, John Jay Knox, and was laid before congress the following year. It was under consideration for two years and was thoroughly debated in both houses. As finally enacted into a law in February, 1873, this bill omitted the silver dollar of 412½ grains (which had been first sanctioned by a law of 1837, but had been very sparingly coined and was hardly recognized as a part of the currency) entirely from the list of coins. In its place provision was made for the coinage of a trade dollar weighing 420 grains for the especial use of our seaboard merchants in their trade with China, Japan and the Central and South American states. It is not exactly correct to say that this act "demonetized" silver, though that is the general assumption, for the few silver dollars then in the country—which had long before disappeared from general circulation—were not in the least impaired in value by it. The actual demonetization, however, occurred the following year and apparently through an error. A revision of the United States statutes, which had been in progress ever since 1869, was completed in 1874, and in the form of a bill was adopted by both houses and became a law June 20, 1874. In the coinage laws in this revision all the silver coins of the United States were made a legal tender for payments not exceeding $5, no exception being made of the silver dollar. In this way the full debt paying power which had belonged to this coin from the very first was taken from it, and it was really "demonetized."—Chicago Post.

National Bank Profits.

It is not unusual to hear the assertion that the profits of banking are not great, and reference is frequently made to the common occurrence of bank failures as an evidence of this supposition.

Positive facts concerning the business of a bank are very difficult to obtain; hence the popular ignorance on the subject is not surprising, but a little investigation will prove that failures are usually nothing but robbery.

We have personal knowledge of a few cases where deposits were received up to a late hour, then the money packed in a grip and carried away, leaving the depositors nothing whatever.

In most cases failures are occasioned by reckless extravagance and speculation, but as an illustration of what is possible by careful management we publish the following extract from the report of W. H. English, made when he resigned the office of president of the First National bank of Indianapolis, addressed to the directors of the institution. He says:

"We commenced business with a capital of $500,000.

"During the 14 years that we have run it we have returned voluntarily to the stockholders $500,000.

"During that time we have paid in dividends $1,400,000, partly in gold.

"I now turn the bank over to you with its capital stock ($500,000) unimpaired, and on hand there is $837,000 of undivided earnings, besides $30,000 premium on our bonds, besides a large sum to our credit for lost and destroyed bills."—Chicago Express.

He Flops When It Pays.

The peculiar interest that attaches to the position of Senator Sherman on financial questions is because one can never tell just where he will bob up.—New York Herald.

WAITE IN CHICAGO.

The Plucky Colorado Populist Says Some Snappy Things to the People.

When the governor was introduced, he said in the still, small voice peculiar to himself: "This evening I shall address you in two ways. In the first place, I shall use some notes; in the second place, I shall speak extemporaneously."

So soon as he laid aside his manuscript his voice became firmer, his manner more easy. He spoke with greater conviction, and the interest and enthusiasm of his audience showed a manifest increase. He takes many of his figures of speech from the Bible. Jonah's gourd is used to illustrate the fashion in which the fortunes of the rich and the few have grown. The money changers in the temple, and the words Christ spoke to them he held up as fair prototypes of the bankers of Wall street and Lombard street. He read with a good deal of simple eloquence the chapter that tells the story of Belshazzar's feast, accompanying it with a running comment and preceding it by saying, "I am going to read you a story that is very old, but may not be very well known in Chicago."

When he made his compliments to the Ministers' alliance of Denver, he told them this story, which was greeted with yells of laughter:

"But I think I got the start of one minister out there in Denver, and you know it ain't very easy to get the start of a minister anywhere. This minister came out in the papers and said it was a matter of great regret and sorrow to him that the governor was a bit profane. 'But,' said I to a reporter—in the newspapers I confessed my sin and acknowledged that sometimes maybe I was a bit profane—'but,' said I to the reporter, 'you know that if I swear a little sometimes, so does the parson pray a little sometimes. But, good Lord, we don't either of us mean anything by it.'"

Among the other snappy things the governor said were these:

"The People's Party proper is only a little more than two years old. Feb. 22, 1892, the industrial conference in session at St. Louis adopted the platform upon which the presidential battle of that year was fought. It sprang Minervalike, from the brain of Jove and won its spurs on the field of American politics. It gave to its presidential candidate 27 electoral votes and received the votes of 1,250,000 American freemen. Since its founding it has in some states practically wiped out the Democratic party. The People's Party has ceased to be visionary and has become a necessity.

"Washington was the richest man in America when he died, and yet his estate inventoried at less than $900,000. In 1790 there were no millionaires in the United States.

"But now it is only a question that the bright children of our public school can solve, when the blessed Four Hundred shall hold all the riches of the country and the masses shall, in truth, become the slaves of capital.

"In despotisms, monarchies and aristocracies the people have no voice, but in republics the people themselves say whether or no their government shall be destroyed.

"No plan of any kind which any party may concoct or espouse will prove of any possible benefit to the people if it leaves our present monetary system untouched. Plans that do not include a remedy for the present monetary system will be but a palliative.

"There is no use nor sense in crying peace when there is no peace. There has not been a national convention of the old parties in years that has not been controlled by the bankers of Wall street.

"Victory for the masses is only to be won through the defeat of the British bankers and the money power of America.

"Europe is paying usury from its poverty and degradation, the United States from its earnings.

"No old party in history ever reformed. Both of the old parties are under the control of the present wicked financial system as dictated by the bankers. The old parties would not change it if they could, and they could not if they would.

"I have an abiding faith in the virtue and intelligence of the people. The republic is safe. There is a just God that watches over the destinies of nations, and he will in his own good time avenge the sufferings of his people."—Chicago Times.

In his message to the legislature Governor Waite refers to the panic as follows:

"Denver had a little tighter pinch than other cities because for years its conscienceless real estate speculators had watered values of lands and lots. Bankrupt banks and investment companies owe millions of dollars to widows and orphans and laborers, which money it would have been more honorable to take from the depositors by highway robbery than by the means through which these poor and ignorant people were induced to deposit their earnings in these institutions.

"One of these bogus investment companies, said to represent $3,000,000, after the panic went where the woodbine twineth, and upon judicial sale all of the assets went for less than $100."

The governor recommends a solemn protest against presidential acts of usurpation and describes the use of United States troops as dangerous to the liberties of the people. United States courts are condemned for mimicking British courts of chancery in enlarging the area of contempt. The peroration reads:

"I will not say 'Hail and farewell.' That would be too formal. We go, but we return. We will meet you, gentlemen, in two years at Philippi."

The Industrial Legion.

The meeting of the National Industrial legion will take place with the Reform Press association at Kansas City on Feb 22.

All recruiting officers holding commissions from headquarters are state officers of every grade. Executive council and one delegate from each legion will be admitted.

We earnestly hope that the utmost energy will be shown in organizing legions. We should have 1,000 new legions before that date. The legions already organized which have not paid dues will confer a great favor on me if they will send as large a contribution as possible to pay printing bills and other expenses. I have borne the burden long enough, and shall be compelled to lay it down unless this is done. A small sum from each legion will be a great help.

How to Make the Hens Pay.

Now or never is the time to gather the profit on eggs. If the pullets have been properly housed and fed they should be laying eggs now at a lively rate, and squaring up the account against them for feed and care since last spring. Do not forget the water; while not so much will be needed as was needed in summer, it is a necessity, and should be pure and clean. If there is danger of its freezing before the fowls will have a chance to drink, warm it slightly. See that the feed is given regularly and in variety. Warm breakfasts now will pay. Keep the shell box, grit box, charcoal box and dust box well filled with fresh and clean material. Clean out the drop pinxs at least once a week, and put fresh, clean leaves or straw over the floor, in which to throw dry grain.

Opening Court With Prayer.

One of the learned justices of the Maine supreme court, than whom no man better knows how to appreciate a really amusing thing, was holding court at Ellsworth, and, according to honored custom, called in a local clergyman to open the session with a supplication to heaven. This worthy gentleman came, and after a chat with the justice proceeded to address the giver of all good and perfect things thus: "Almighty God, we beseech Thee to bestow upon the presiding justice the wisdom which he so greatly needs!" It is said that the same judge once opened court after prayer, which began this way: "Oh, Lord, we pray Thee to overrule the decisions of the court to Thine own honor and glory."—Bangor Commercial.

MIRA NOW VISIBLE.

The Star That Blazes Out Like a Celestial Search Light.

The Philadelphia Record says the southern evening skies during the next few months will be the scene of an interesting stellar exhibition. With an opera glass the observer may discover in line with the star Menkar a red star, nearly at the center of a small triangle of faint stars. Having found it with the glass he will probably be able to see it with the naked eye. A week hence it will almost certainly be visible to the naked eye. In another week it will be quite conspicuous, and if it is true to its record it will continue to brighten until at the end of six or eight weeks it will be nearly, if not quite, as bright as Menkar.

This is the famous star Mira the Wonderful, one of the most remarkable of the variable stars—remarkable both for the great range of its variability and for the irregularity of its habits. When at its minimum Mira is away below the limit of naked-eye vision, being then a star of between the ninth and tenth magnitudes. At its maximum it sometimes surpasses in splendor a star of the second magnitude, although—this is one of its eccentricities—occasionally it attains to only the fourth magnitude before its light begins to wane. It runs the cycle of its changes in an average period of eleven months, during about seven of which it is invisible to the naked eye. Having attained its greatest brilliancy, it usually remains without noticeable change for a week or ten days, and then about three months is again beyond the reach of the naked eye. Its last maximum occurred in March last, and another is due, therefore, in the coming February.

Mira loses its redness as it brightens, and the spectroscope gives the very interesting information that its increase of brilliancy is largely due to an outbreak of luminous gases, the cause of which is among the still unsolved riddles of science. Its spectrum, when it is at its brightest, is crossed by a large number of intensely bright lines—hieroglyphs in which the spectroscopist sees the certain evidence of glowing gases—some of which are due to hydrogen.

The star is this year in a position to be observed at a convenient hour during the most interesting portion of its period of visibility, and the amateur star-gazer should not lose this unusually favorable opportunity of forming its acquaintance and witnessing its singular behavior.

SAWDUST VALUABLE.

Modern Discovery for the Utilization of a Heretofore Useless Offal.

One of the methods whereby profit has been made from sawdust is the manufacture from it of oxalic acid, which is a simple process producing a material in wide commercial demand in the arts of dyeing and other chemical arts. As intimated, the process is not only simple, but the outfit for conducting it does not involve a large investment. The principles involved are not complicated, and the process can be carried out by cheap labor under the superintendence of a fairly intelligent director.

Oxalic acid is frequently met with in the vegetable kingdom, especially in combination with gases which destroy its poisonous character. Oxalate of lime is found in considerable quantity in the rhubarb plant; oxalate of potash is found in the sorrels and oxalate of soda in salicornia, and sal soda. Formerly the acid was obtained from the sorrel, oxalis acetosella, but more recently from sugar, by the action of the nitric acid upon it. The nitric acid and sugar are boiled for some time, then evaporated to dryness, and the oxalic acid formed is purified by recrystallization from water. A much cheaper material than sugar is sawdust. In this case an alkali must be employed instead of an acid, as well as at a higher temperature. The operation is conducted in an iron vessel of suitable size and shape; and either caustic soda or potash is employed, the yield being greater with the latter.

Some recent experiments made go to prove that a mixture of forty parts of caustic potash to sixty parts of caustic soda will produce as large a yield as when potash alone is used, provided the operation be performed in shallow vessels with thin layers of the material, avoiding as far as possible the fusing of the mass. Soft woods, such as pine and fir, produce larger quantities of oxalic acid than hard wood like oak. The proportion of the wood to alkali should not exceed 75 to 100, and the temperature should be about 480 degrees Fahrenheit.

A Sightless Fox-Hunter.

John J. Kirk of Upper Darby, who is entirely blind, is one of the most enthusiastic fox hunters in the county. He was formerly a great hunter in the saddle, but a few years ago lost his eyesight in a gunning accident. Now he follows the hounds in an open wagon, accompanied by a driver. He says the baying of the hounds is music to his ears, and he can follow the pack and be in at the death of the fox as often as any one in the chase, provided his driver goes the road he tells him to go. Mr. Kirk, accompanied by William Chittick, his driver, started out a few days ago about daylight and came across a pack of hounds making "reynard" move at a hot pace. The men in the wagon started in hot pursuit. After three hours' hard chase the dogs caught the fox on the old man's farm in Marple, and Mr. Kirk was there as the animal breathed his last. He was followed in a few minutes by George Leiper and a number of other sportsmen of Ridley, all of whom decided that the brush belonged to Mr. Kirk. He took the fox and will have it stuffed and mounted.—Philadelphia Press.

A BRIGHT STAR.

A SKETCH OF THE MAN WHO LED MARY ANDERSON TO FAME.

Also Played Leading Roles with Booth, Barrett and Thorne.

[From the St. Louis Chronicle.]

One of the most conspicuous figures in the Stageland of America to-day is John W. Norton. Born in the Seventh ward of New York city forty-six years ago, the friends of his youth were Thomas W. Keene, and Frank Chanfrau. We find Keene a star at the age of 25 and Norton in the flower of early manhood, the leading man for Edwin Booth at the famous Winter Garden Theater. He was starred with Lawrence Barrett early in the 70s, and alternated the leading roles with Charles Thorne at the Varlety theater in New Orleans. Early in the Centennial year, in Louisville, Norton met our Mary Anderson, then a fair young girl who aspired for stage fame, took her under his guidance and, as everybody knows, led her to fame. Mr. Norton is now the proprietor of the Grand Opera House in St. Louis, the Du Quesne Theater, Pittsburg, and one of the stockholders in the American Extravaganza Company.

One afternoon early in June he hobbled into his New York office on Broadway and encountered his business manager, George McManus, who had also been a rheumatic sufferer for two years. Norton was surprised that McManus had discarded his cane. "Who cured you?" he asked. "I cured myself," replied McManus, "with Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

"I was encouraged by Mr. McManus' cure, and as a last resort tried the Pink Pills myself," said Mr. Norton to a Chronicle reporter. "You have known me for five years, and know how I have suffered. Why during the summer of 1893 I was on my back at the Mullanphy hospital, in this city, four weeks. I was put on the old system of dieting, with a view to clearing those acidulous properties in my blood that medical theorists say is the cause of my rheumatism. I left the hospital feeling stronger, but the first damp weather brought with it those excruciating pains in the legs and back. It was the same old trouble. After sitting down for a stretch of five minutes, the pains screwed my legs into a knot when I arose, and I hobbled as painfully as ever. After I had taken my first box of Pink Pills, it struck me that the pains were less troublesome. I tried another box, and I began almost unconsciously to have faith in the Pink Pills. I improved so rapidly that I could rise after sitting at my desk for an hour and the twinges of rheumatism that accompanied my rising were so mild that I scarcely noticed them. During the past two weeks we have had much rainy weather in St. Louis. But the dampness has not had the slightest effect in bringing back the rheumatism, which I consider a sufficient and reliable test of the efficacy of Pink Pills. I may also say that the Pink Pills have acted as a tonic on my stomach, which I thought was well nigh destroyed by the thousand and one alleged remedies I consumed in the past five years."

STOLE BOUCICAULT'S HAIR DYE.

How Sadie Martinot Induced the Old Beau to Advance Her $500.

Sadie Martinot, when she made her first appearance in San Francisco with Dion Boucicault, was, as she is now, as cunning and jolly a dame as ever pressed her red lips to a goblet of Pommery, says the News Letter. Miss Martinot used to tell a good story about Boucicault. In the later years of his life the great dramatist was very conceited about his personal appearance. His long hair was carefully dyed every day with a preparation which he got from Paris.

One morning Miss Martinot said to Dion:

"Mr. Boucicault, I want $500."

"Miss Martinot," replied the dramatist, "I cannot conveniently furnish you with that amount."

"I am sorry," said Miss Martinot, "but I hope, when I call later on, that you'll be able to find the cash for me."

Next morning when Mr. Boucicault arose and went to perform the ordinary duties of his toilet he found that his hair dye was missing. He knew that Miss Martinot was acquainted with the whereabouts of that important article. He also knew that it would take him at least two months to receive a fresh installment from Paris in case his stock in hand did not turn up. At breakfast he said, very humbly:

"My dear Miss Sadie, did you see anything of my hair dye?"

To which that gifted and beautiful lady replied:

"I assure you, Mr. Boucicault, I found among my effects a mixture to change the color of the hair which closely approaches yours, so far as I can tell from the label."

"And what is the price of that mixture?" inquired Mr. Boucicault, blandly.

"Only $500," replied Miss Martinot with a witching smile.

"How fortunate!" said Mr. Boucicault. "I've got a check for that exact amount in my pocket."

"And how fortunate, also," replied Miss Martinot; "I have the bottle in mine!"

Mr. Boucicault took the bottle, Miss Martinot took the check, and then over their black coffee they chatted about the weather.

An Awkward Situation.

An illustrious French prelate was at a great banquet, in company with many members of the French nobility, and many other ecclesiastics. The conversation turned upon the life-long experience of priests, their insight into the depths of human nature and the strange secrets of which, in virtue of their office, they must become the depositaries. To point his remarks, his eminence said: "For instance, gentlemen, the first confession I ever received was that of a murderer." At that moment and while expressions of wonder, interest and horror were still upon the lips of his auditors, the door opened and a nobleman of the highest rank, a man well known among them, entered the room. He saluted the company and then paid his respects to the prince of the church, adding gracefully, as he turned to the company: "You are perhaps not aware, gentlemen, that I had the honor to be his eminence's first penitent." The consternation of the company and his eminence's state of mind may be imagined.—San Francisco Argonaut.

Arc Lamps and Smells.

Recent investigations confirming casual notes made through many years past go to prove that the rays of the arc light have a decided therapeutic value, and that the naked arc, i. e., without a glass globe, may be a very useful disinfecting agent in hospital wards and places where the rays can be projected directly on the organisms. Some years ago experiments were made in this way in the Paris sewers, with the result that considerable purifying action was noted. Dr. Margaret Cleaves, reporting on these facts, tells how she once dispersed the odors from refuse barrels near her office door by switching on an arc light for half an hour and going away. When she came back the atmosphere, which had been unbearable, had become perfectly pure, although elsewhere in the house, where the arc light could not have any effect, the bad smell of garbage still persisted. Any one who has frequented arc light stations must have noticed the pleasant odor of ozone around. It caused by the generation of the currents in some of Nikola Tesla's wonderful experiments with high tension currents a remarkable quantity of ozone is given off, and care has, in fact, to be exercised not to ozonize the air too much in this way. Sunlight is a great disinfectant and purifier, and, as the electric light approximates to it, one can understand something of this power to arrest bacterial development and to sterilize sources of infection and corruption. While this is true of the arc light, which burns in the open air, the incandescent lamp has another distinct advantage over ordinary illuminants in the fact that there is no combustion going on inside it, and that it, therefore, does not consume the oxygen of the air and vitiate the atmosphere. Both kinds of electric light—the arc and the incandescent—can be used in giving patients a bath of light with a result equivalent to a combined light and vapor bath. The skin is browned as if by sunburn, and the effect is described as most salutory. The light is used in this work in combination with a lens and reflector for localizing the rays.

A Wire-Wound Flywheel.

Among the most recent and novel applications of wire, perhaps none has greater interest for the mechanical world than that presented by the new wire flywheel lately erected at the Mannesmann Tube company's works, Germany. Heavy flywheels driven at high velocities obviously present dangers of breaking asunder from the great centrifugal force developed. The wheel at the factory mentioned consists of a cast iron hub, or boss, to which two steel plates, disks or checks, about twenty feet in diameter, are bolted. The peripheral space between the disks is filled in with some seventy tons of No. 5 steel wire, completely wound round the hub, and the tensile resistance thus obtained is far superior to any casting. This huge flywheel is driven at a speed of 240 revolutions per minute, or a peripheral velocity of about 2.8 miles per minute (250 feet per second approximately), which is nearly three times the average speed of any express train in the world. The length of wire upon such a constructed flywheel would be about 250 miles. The use of paper is also regarded with favor as a face for large flywheels, the tensile strength of paper being enormous; and it is quite possible that some of the new big flywheels will be built up with a paper rim.

The Origin of Point Lace.

A little known example of inventive genius in woman is that afforded by Barbara Uttman of Saxony, and her point lace so long in fashionable use all over the world. She invented the process and apparatus for manufacturing this beautiful handiwork, which has since given employment to millions of operators, and which, in its line, has never been excelled. The apparatus looks like a long pincushion bristling with pins arranged to outline the pattern or design. The operator manages from ten to fifty peculiar spools, allowing the thread to feed over the pins alternately, until the design is completed. The spools or bobbins are purposely of different colors, so as to be easily distinguishable. The process is slow and difficult to learn. Miss Uttman founded schools, where thousands learned it. Since her time, when inventive ability was rare, even among men, her ideas have been incorporated in the construction of machinery by which the lace is produced at wonderful lower rates, and yet Barbara Uttman's lace still surpasses all.

Innovations in Umbrellas.

One of the later novelties in umbrellas is a form that can be carried in an ordinary gripsack and adjusted to a great variety of needs. For instance, it can be hitched to a bicycle in six different positions. In general essentials it corresponds to a carriage top. The handles are made in two or three sections and largely of aluminum. So popular has the device become, a large factory now employs several hundred hands turning it out in a great variety. Some years ago an attempt was made by an ingenious American to introduce a neat little umbrella that could be fitted either to the hat or the shoulders, leaving the hands entirely free for work. It was expected that it would be welcomed in the tropics and that it might even solve the great problem of rendering white labor possible in competition with black in tropical regions, while it was obviously just the thing to save marching soldiers from sunstroke. But this ingenious invention somehow did not "take," and another fortune thus remains ungarnered.

How to Detect Icebergs.

The schemes and plans hit upon to assist in detecting the proximity of icebergs at sea are legion, but few of them are based on natural indications. For example, the captain of an ocean steamer in most cases finds out when a vessel is approaching an iceberg from the men down in the engine room. This sounds queer, but it is a fact, nevertheless. It appears that when a steamship enters water considerably colder than that through which it has been going its propellor runs faster. Such water usually surrounds the vicinage of bergs for many miles. When the propeller's action, therefore, is accelerated without steam power being increased, word is passed up to the officers on the bridge that bergs may be expected, and a close lookout for them is established. Such a phenomenon carefully studied is capable of being reduced to data which would give helpful warning.

THE ONWARD MARCH

of Consumption is stopped short by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. If you haven't waited beyond reason, there's complete recovery and cure.

Although by many believed to be incurable, there is the evidence of hundreds of living witnesses to the fact that, in all its earlier stages, consumption is a curable disease. Not every case, but a large percentage of cases, and we believe, fully 98 per cent. are cured by Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery, even after the disease has progressed so far as to induce repeated bleedings from the lungs, severe lingering cough with copious expectoration (including tubercular matter), great loss of flesh and extreme emaciation and weakness.

Do you doubt that hundreds of such cases reported to us as cured by "Golden Medical Discovery" were genuine cases of that dread and fatal disease? You need not take our word for it. They have, in nearly every instance, been so pronounced by the best and most experienced home physicians, who have no interest whatever in misrepresenting them, and who were often strongly prejudiced and advised against a trial of "Golden Medical Discovery," but who have been forced to confess that it surpasses, in curative power over this fatal malady, all other medicines with which they are acquainted. Nasty cod-liver oil and its filthy "emulsions" and mixtures, had been tried in nearly all these cases and had either utterly failed to benefit, or had only seemed to benefit a little for a short time. Extract of malt, whiskey, and various preparations of the hypophosphites had also been faithfully tried in vain.

The photographs of a large number of those cured of consumption, bronchitis, lingering coughs, asthma, chronic nasal catarrh and kindred maladies, have been skillfully reproduced in a book of 160 pages which will be mailed to you, on receipt of address and six cents in stamps. You can then write those cured and learn their experience. Address WORLD'S DISPENSARY MEDICAL ASSOCIATION, Buffalo, N. Y.

THE HAYWARD TRIAL

THE MURDERER OF CATHERINE GING ON TRIAL.

Progress of the Celebrated Murder Case at Minneapolis—The Defense Produces Witnesses in Support of the Third Man Theory.

Minneapolis, Feb. 20. — The state sprung a surprise in the Hayward murder trial when it withdrew all opposition to the introduction of Maggie Wachter's testimony. Miss Wachter is the stenographer of Blixt's attorney who was to testify that Blixt had stated to his attorney in her presence that it was with Adry Hayward and not with Harry that he had conspired to murder Miss Ging. The court had held that it was a communication between client and attorney, and was, therefore, inadmissible. There had been the greatest interest awakened among lawyers generally, and Mr. Erwin this morning received a telegram from W. D. Frazee, at Okolona, Miss., citing three decisions as to the point. The court was unwilling to admit the testimony without the direct consent of Blixt, and the murderer was brought from the jail and questioned personally by Judge Smith. He had no objection, he said, and Miss Wachter was called. It then developed that she was sick and could not be present to-day. The sudden change of front on the part of the state is said to be due to its ability to impeach Miss Wachter's evidence absolutely. Blixt's attorney will go on the stand and contradict it, and it is also understood that the state has ascertained from a confidant of Miss Wachter the true evidence of the evidence.

Thomas Waterman was called to testify as to Harry Hayward's movements on Dec. 3, the day of the murder. He contradicted Adry Hayward in several important particulars as to time. Three boarders at Harry Hayward's boarding house testified that he was in the dining room as late as 7:10 that evening, which brings him dangerously close to the time when Liveryman Wilson claims to have seen him driving with Miss Ging, half a mile away. The defense expects to establish a complete alibi for the defendant from 1 until 10:30 p. m. the day of the murder.

Adry Implicated.

Later Miss Wachter appeared and gave her testimony, in which she said that Blixt, in his first confession, implicated Adry.

Minneapolis, Feb. 21.—Edward Goldsall, the Chicago dental student, was put on the stand when the Hayward murder trial opened for his redirect examination. He testified that he had usually been, Harry Hayward's companion when he came to Chicago to gamble, and that he had seen him lose as much as $1,000 at a time. He usually had plenty of money and for this reason Goodsell was not surprised to see him with $5,000 when there in November. Asked on cross-examination if he had ever seen Harry lose at 73 Jackson street, Chicago, he said no, it was at a Wabash avenue resort that he lost.

Frank Erhardt, who was summoned by his brother when the body was found, gave evidence which seemed to impeach the evidence of Blixt in one particular. He swore that he had found in the dirt near where the body lay a heel mark and then a toe mark of a lady's shoe. There was also the trace of where the foot had dragged to where the body lay. This evidence went to show that Miss Ging's body was pushed out of the buggy feet first instead of head first, as the murderer testified. Of course this would overthrow the theory that the fracture of the skull and the contusion were caused by the fall from the buggy, and would help to impeach the testimony of Blixt.

George Grindall was an important witness for the defense. He was standing on First avenue north, between Fourth and Fifth streets at 7 o'clock or thereabouts on Dec. 3, the night of the murder. Grindall had an appointment with a young woman at the point named, and was waiting there for her. Standing a short way from him was a man, "like that man there," said the witness, pointing to Attorney Sweetser. Grindall saw Miss Ging drive up. The man he had seen waiting there entered the buggy with her and they drove away. This point is about a block from the West hotel, whence Miss Ging started on her fateful ride. The description given by Grindall of the man who joined her does not at all fit Harry Hayward. There was between the lawyers over Grindall's testimony. The state had shown in the cross-examination that the witness' character was not above reproach, and then in the redirect examination Mr. Erwin attempted to show that the witness had been hounded and persecuted by the police to get him to change his testimony. These questions were steadily ruled out by the court as improper, and finally the court found it necessary to reprove Mr. Erwin for his persistent attempts to get the matter before the jury.

"If the court pleases," said Erwin in a high key, "I want to show the methods that have been used by persons on the other side of manufacturing and suppressing evidence."

Turning to County Attorney Nye, he said: "I'm going to hunt you out and go through this thing."

Nye half-rose in his chair, his face as white as ashes, and glared at the tall attorney for the defense.

"I'll follow you," he hissed, "to the ends of the earth. Don't talk to me of manufacturing evidence. I'll show who has been manufacturing evidence in this case."

"I hope you will," shouted Erwin, and Judge Smith was forced to interrupt the colloquy, the participants in which had assumed very threatening attitudes. But the questions were rigorously excluded. Grindall's evidence was somewhat shaken in the cross-examination.

The elusive "third man" whom the defense has been so earnestly chasing thus bobs up again in Grindall's evidence, but in a different guise from the descriptions of him hinted at heretofore in the defense's evidence.

Worked by an Attorney.

George Grindall resumed the stand and said that efforts had been made to corrupt his testimony by an attorney, Charles Ebert. Ebert, he says, described to him what he must say on the stand, trying to have a short man substituted for a rather important tall man. Ebert had been representing himself as one of Erwin's men. The witness said he did not find out until last Saturday that Ebert was working for the state's side of the case. Then, he declares, he allowed him to go on. Last night, for the first time, he informed Mr. Erwin of Ebert's operations.

Julia E. Walker of St. Paul testified to having seen Miss Ging several times in St. Paul with a middle aged man who wore an iron gray moustache. Here is the third man again. The description given by this witness does not tally with either that of Wilson or Grindall. The defense is now on the trail of the third man.

Mrs. Abbie Lowell, wife of a St. Paul police captain, was with Mrs. Walker at one time and she corroborated her friend. Mr. Nye tried to shake the witnesses' testimony, but was unable to by close examination.

Lillian Burch, a girl fifteen years of age, testified to hearing two shots at Lake Calhoun the night of the murder while she was skating. Gertie Brown, seventeen years of age, heard the same shots while she was skating, apparently near the ice house. Shortly after 8 o'clock she started to go home with her escort by way of Lake street and she saw two men with long coats and caps come from the direction of the ice houses pass in front of them and stop on the other side of the street. She thought they acted queerly, but could not describe why she thought so.

Would "Fix" Him

Minneapolis, Feb. 22. — Horace L. Wells, paying teller of the City bank, and Louise Ireland were the witnesses in the opening of the Hayward case. Wells testified to having paid Harry Hayward between $6,000 and $7,000 after Sept. 1, 1894, thus accounting for the defendant's possession of money that did not come from Miss Ging.

Mrs. L. L. Hayward, the mother of the defendant, was then sworn. The first part of her testimony was intended to help establish Harry's alibi. Mrs. Hayward said that Harry came into her room at 7:20, and said he was going to make a call. At about 7:40 he came in again, hurriedly brushed his hair and went out, saying that he was going to the opera. The twenty minutes between these two times is the vital period, for it was at that time, according to Blixt's testimony, that Harry put him in the buggy with Miss Ging, with instructions to Drive Away and Kill Her.

Mrs. Hayward was next asked about the existence of insanity in her family, but the state at once objected as the question of insanity had not been raised. The objection was sustained by the court.

Mr. Erwin asked a long series of questions bearing on Adry's actions, his jealousy, his unreasoning fears during youth, the medical treatment he had been given, etc., but they were all ruled out.

Mrs. Hayward could not answer a direct question as to the differences between Adry and Harry affirmatively or negatively.

W. W. Hayward, the father of the two boys, was the next witness. He spoke in a clear, full tone of voice, and said he had resided in Minnesota since 1867. His business office was in the Oneida block. A portion of the time Adry Hayward assisted him in collecting and keeping his accounts.

Witness stated that he was in his office the morning of Nov. 30 all the forenoon. Harry was there a while —for a half hour, perhaps. Adry was there for a short time. They were not there alone that morning. This is the time that Adry states that Harry and he had the exciting interview in reference to the proposed killing of a woman, and Adry told Harry he would hang for it if he did. The witness corroborated his wife in that portion of her testimony where she said Adry was violent on Oct. 7, and called his mother names which reflected upon her character. In telling of the occurrence he broke down and sobbed, and the proceedings were delayed some time waiting for him to compose himself. Half the women in the audience cried from sympathy. On cross-examination the state's attorney showed that he was not good at remembering dates on any other occasions except the ones specified—the day after Thanksgiving and Dec. 8.

He then testified that he had kept a large number of $1 bills in an iron box in his safe for about two years, and upon looking there the other day found that they were all gone but one. Both boys, he said, knew the combination to the safe. He said that Adry said he would hold up street cars and said he would "fix" Harry.

A Poor Showing.

Minneapolis, Feb. 23.—County Attorney Nye resumed his cross-examination of W. W. Hayward, father of the young man accused of the murder of Catherine Ging. He was quite unable to shake the old gentleman's story in any essential particular, although he demonstrated that the witness' memory as to dates and happenings at about the time of the occurrence he described was not the best. It is a remarkable fact that thus far in the case, although both Nye and Erwin are adept questioners, neither has been able to shake the testimony of any of the witnesses on cross-examination. Mr. Nye tried to establish by the senior Hayward that on Dec. 6, three days after the murder, "Elder", Stewart had told him the story that Adry had told Stewart three days before the murder. Hayward senior was unable to remember when this conversation had taken place, except that it was after the murder.

William Yale, a gunsmith, and Robert Weed, a jeweler, testified as to various kinds of cartridges, the weight of bullets, etc.

Mr. Erwin succeeded in establishing that the fatal bullet was of the same weight as one taken from a 38 short cartridge. Blixt had testified that when Harry gave him the cartridges he had declared them to be 38 long. Mr. Nye strenuously, but in vain, objected to this evidence, and Mr. Erwin was jubilant at his success.

Harry Testifies.

At last Mr. Erwin said he had no other witnesses present except the defendant himself. "Call Harry," he added.

With his arms folded and a set expression on his face, Harry Hayward took the stand to battle for his own life.

He said, in answer to the usual preliminary questions, that he was born in Macoupin county, Illinois, 29 years ago, and had lived in Minneapolis for 25 years.

"Now," said Erwin, "Mr. Blixt has testified against you, and Mr. Adry Hayward has testified against you. Have they testified correctly?"

"They have not," responded the witness, setting his teeth.

"Has the testimony of Adry Hayward given here on the stand been true or false?"

"Almost wholly false."

"Do you know any reason why?"

"I do."

"Explain it to the jury."

"I object," said Mr. Nye.

"Sustained," rejoined the judge. "I suppose this is for impeachment."

"Oh, no, your honor, I'm not trying this whole case on the word impeachment. I want the jury to know the feelings of fear which might influence Adry Hayward to testify falsely against his brother. I want them to know the truth."

"Well, you can call his attention to the particular questions and answers if you choose," said Judge Smith.

"You have heard your father's, mother's and brother's testimony." said Erwin, finally, after consultation with his colleagues, "regarding the discrepancy in your brother's accounts. Did you have any trouble with him about what he said to your mother?"

An objection to this was sustained, and Mr. Erwin asked:

"Did your brother have any fear of you for the reason that you might make disclosures about him?"

"Yes, sir," responded Harry, before Nye could object, but the answer was ruled out.

Adry Was With Miss Ging.

"Now, you have heard Adry say that he had never seen Miss Ging. Did he ever see her?"

Harry said that Adry went riding with Miss Ging and Miss Vedder once. Mr. Nye objected strenuously to anything further on this line, and was sustained by the court.

"Now," turning to the witness on the stand, "I will ask you about all your relations with Miss Ging. State them fully to the jury."

"Well," said Harry, in a reminiscent mood, "I was introduced to Miss Ging, I think, in January, 1894, by Mr. Speaker, at the boarding house. I met her at first, perhaps, as often as once a week. After a while I met her as often as twice a week. Then you might say we began to be getting fairly well acquainted. Things went on in that way during April. We kept getting better and better acquainted all the time; more and more intimate. From July and August on through to December we were what you might call lovers, I suppose."

Harry then went into details regarding his gambling experience. He had played faro in many cities, and had won and lost thousands of dollars. Miss Ging became interested in his gambling, and the first time she engaged in a venture she put in $75. He always divided with her according to the amount she gave him and what sum he furnished. He wanted her to stop, but she refused.

Nervous, contradictory, uncertain, garrulous, rambling and explanatory. These words explain the aspect of Harry Hayward on the stand, testifying to save his own life. In the morning when he was answering preliminary questions in regard to his life, his gambling habits, etc., he was concise, perfectly at ease, quick to answer, and made an ideal witness. In the afternoon when his attorney began to lead him into the details of the circumstances attending the tragedy, he went "up in the air," as a horseman would say, and made a bad impression.

As a whole, from the testimony given by the witness, he has not made any points for himself, and his appearance has told against him.

EMBEZZLEMENT CHARGED.

James S. Masterman of a Defunct Printing Company Arrested.

Minneapolis, Feb. 23.—James S. Masterman was arrested by Court Officer Erlichman this afternoon on a warrant charging him with the embezzlement of $600. Masterman for the past three years has been the manager of the Swinburne Printing company, and when they made an assignment on Jan. 21 Masterman was found to be short in his accounts $600. He was arraigned in the municipal court this afternoon, and his examination was set for next Wednesday at 9 o'clock. His bail was fixed at $1,000.

Conspiracy Charged.

Des Moines, Feb. 23.—Charges of conspiracy with certain gamblers were made against Mayor Hillis of this city some time ago. To-day the city council commenced an investigation. Two discharged officers and two gamblers testified that the mayor had practically sold the monopoly of gambling to certain men. He is also charged with having received $1,000 for pool and wheel of fortune privileges at the race meeting last fall. The mayor appeared through counsel and denied all the charges. The accusers are discharged policemen.

To appropriate money for a safe and fixtures in the vault of the state treasurer's office.

To license peddlers and prescribing penalties for the violation thereof.

The senate judiciary reported three salary bills for county and city officials in cities having over 100,000 population. The bills were ordered printed and referred to the delegations from Hennepin and Ramsey counties. The common counci of such cities are given authority to regulate the salaries, but not to allow any larger salaries than are paid at present. They must reduce all salaries except those of mayor and controller for the terms for which they are elected.

The surprise of the morning was a favorable report on S. F. 234, Senator Sperry's baking powder bill. The report came from the committee on manufactures. This bill is of the well known variety. It provides that the constituents of the baking powder shall be printed in its label, and if it contains alum that this fact shall be stamped on the metal boxes in which the powder is sold. The bill, if it passes, will go into effect on Aug. 1, 1895.

The committee on reform schools recommended for passage S. F. 285, relating to the state schools. It proposes to change the name of the "state reform school" to the "Minnesota state training school for boys and girls." All statutes relating to the reform school are consolidated and re-enacted. A full account of its various sections was published when the bill was introduced.

S. F. 235 was reported back from the committee on university and university lands, with a recommendation that it be sent to the finance committee. The bill is the one providing for the erection of a girl's college in connection with the state school of agriculture. The bill carries an appropriation of $50,000.

Bills Passed.

Wyman—An amendment to the factory inspection law.

Masterman—An amendment to the penal code to provide punishment for falsifying log and timber scales.

Culkin—A bill amending section 101, chapter 63, General Laws 1878 relating to writs of attachment in justice courts.

Morgan—A bill to amend section 107, chapter 34, General Statutes 1878, extending right of logging corporations to exercise powers of eminent domain to corporations organized under territorial laws.

The St. Hilaire Boom & Water Power company has been organized It will be capitalized to $50,000 and will control all shore rights on the Red Lake river from St. Hilaire to Thief River Falls assuming the rights formerly owned by the St. Hilaire Boom & Navigation company. The officers are [illegible] president and general manager; J. E. Luce, Minneapolis, Vice president; O. F. Post St. Hilaire secretary and treasurer, and these officers together with Fred Eikhof of St. Hilaire, and W. F. McKenzie of Crookston compose the first board of directors. St. Hilaire has voted $3000 bonds as a bonus to the enterprise. There is probably no place on the Red Lake river where the booming facilities equal those at St. Hilaire. Work on the dam has already begun.—Mississippi Valley Lumberman,

The financial statement has come back from St Paul and was published in the Fertile Journal yesterday, which seventeen newspaper offices pay taxes in Polk county and a large number of the printers who would be glad of an opportunity of earning a little money to provide themselves and families with the necessaries of life the official papers to whom the commissioners awarded the county printing sent the work to St. Paul because all of them together did not have a press enough to do it, as result the three or one hundred dollars which should have been spent among our own workmen went to help build up the institutions and support the workmen of another town. The times is making no complaint on its own account, but it is proper the people of the county should know the facts,— Crookston Times.

Minneapolis Tribune:—Some of the state senators do not seem to "tackle kindly" to the bill introduced by Senator Robbins, to make it a criminal offence for any state official to lobby for the election of any person or the passage of any bill, If there had been such a law in force during the recent senatorial contest it would have relegated a good many state officials who were particularly active at the time to a condition of "innocuous desuetude". It seems as if there ought to be some restraint upon the action of men who are paid by the state and whose time belongs to the whole people. It is grossly improper for them to mix in factional squabbles or to engage in lobbying, but how far the legislature can constitutionally go in controlling them is of course a question. It seems that the main objection to the bill was its faulty construction and legal imperfections, and it was referred to Senator Wyman for recasting. Wyman ought to take the best legal advice and draw up a bill that will pass muster and not be pronounced invalid by the courts. If at the same time something could be done to curb the lobbyists who are not state officials and do not belong to the legislature, it would tend to purify legislation. The right of any citizen to go before the legislature or a committee thereof and argue in favor of or against any measure ought not to be restricted; but the use of improper influences, by any one, ought to be visited with severe punishment. It will no doubt be difficult to frame a law that will satisfactorily cover the case and prove effective, but an earnest effort to accomplish so desirable a consummation can be made.

HOW THEY APPEAR IN THE TWILIGHT OF THE FIFTY-THIRD CONGRESS.

Lawrence McGann's Pet Measure—Cleveland in the Lowest Depths—What It Costs the People to Run Their Government—Why Bryan Was Excited.

[Special Correspondence.]

WASHINGTON, Feb. 25.—Hon. Lawrence McGann has a living hope that the arbitration bill reported from his committee will become a law, and if perseverance could command success it certainly would. I question if any bill brought into this congress is the result of longer and more earnest work, and it is the product of many of the most earnest men and clearest thinkers in this country. It has also had the rare advantage [illegible] There could be no question about the [illegible] bearing on it and no partisan [illegible] as to the necessity for some action. Work on it began—for the present bill is but the condensed essence of many propositions introduced in the house labor committee—while the panic [illegible] was at its worst. It continued through all the trying months of 1894, and the committee had [illegible] the Chicago struggle, and for witnesses the men interested or actually participating [illegible] Of course the measure has some defects, as the first bills on all important questions have, but the great point is to make a start to the end that experience may the sooner cure defects.

It provides that whenever there is an important strike or other disturbance concerning wages, hours of labor or conditions of employment, seriously interrupting or threatening to interrupt the business of a common carrier, the commissioner of labor and the chairman of the interstate commerce commission shall at once communicate with the parties and if possible bring about an arbitration of such controversy.

The arbitration board shall consist of one person chosen by the common carrier or employer directly interested, one chosen by the labor organization to which the employees belong and a third chosen by those two. If two or more labor organizations are involved, they are to act concurrently in choosing their arbitrator. Employers and the officials of organizations representing the employees are to set forth in writing the matters to be decided and stipulate: First, that pending the arbitration the existing status shall not be changed; second, that the award shall be filed with the clerk of the federal court of the district and be conclusive unless set aside for errors of law; third, that the agreement may be enforced in equity so far as the powers of an equity court permit; fourth, that employees dissatisfied with the award must give 30 days' notice in writing of their intention to quit and employers the same of their intention to discharge, and, fifth, that the award shall continue in force one year. There are many minor provisions, all of which have been carefully scrutinized and approved by representatives of several labor organizations and especially those of railway employees. If it be possible to draft a bill satisfactory to both parties in interest, this is the bill. At any rate, great good is possible from it, and it is not easy to see how any harm can result. Of course compulsory features are carefully avoided.

The danger is that the uproar over currency questions will obscure everything else, but I must say, though not anxious to compliment either political party, that the discussion of our finances has improved of late both in the ability displayed and the plain statement of fundamental truth. It would be [illegible] to [illegible] to say that the president has sunk to the lowest depth it can reach, but if there is a lower political [illegible] the experts have not yet located it. [illegible] he has right but one apologist and [illegible] practically none. His surrender to Belmont, Rothschild & Co. is universally admitted to be [illegible] without excuse, and all that his best friends can say is that there are facts unknown to the public which may justify him. The debates have also brought into strong light the difference confronting the two labor interests and many not heretofore made prominent. One of these is the enormously increased cost of government and the almost certainty that the increase will be still more rapid in the near future. There has indeed been a disgraceful waste of the public money, and when we compare the increase with the decline in the products of labor it is seen that the producer is robbed both ways. The losses to government under railways and the navy are known to all readers, but the general loss when put in terms of commodities is truly appalling.

In the administration of Franklin Pierce—and it certainly never was accused of severe economy—the total cost of the national government was not quite 40,000,000 bushels of wheat per year. For the fiscal year 1865, during most of which the government was expending $3,000,000 per day, the total cost was not quite 700,000,000 bushels of wheat. Last year it was more than 800,000,000 bushels, and what it will be for this fiscal year God alone knows, for on the day I write this the export price of wheat in New York is 56 cents, and the market is noted as "dull." It cannot fall below 900,000,000 bushels in any event, or 30 per cent more than in the most expensive year of the civil war.

If the Republicans come into power in 1897, as it never enters their heads to doubt that they will, they will, of course, carry out their promises, for it must be said to their credit that they have never failed to keep their word when it was for the expenditure of money. They will pass a general pension act with the minimum rate considerably above the present. They will annex Hawaii, which will necessitate doubling or trebling our navy. They will build the great canals which they have promised, especially the Nicaragua canal, as it will only cost, they say, $87,000,000. They will subsidize sufficient shipping to do all our ocean carrying and expend money on other jobs they have promised. By 1900 the expense of government will be at least $750,000,000 per year, and it may be much more. And what will then be the price of wheat if the gold basis is maintained? All we know at present is that 40 years ago it took but one-third of the wheat crop to run the government and 35 years ago but half, while now it takes all the wheat and one-third of the corn, and we may conclude that by 1901 it will take all the wheat, corn and oats and a [illegible]

To help toward that blessed consummation the president [illegible] away [illegible] millions to [illegible] and the committee on naval affairs wants to expend $25,000,000 [illegible] useless battleships. In the discussion on this [illegible] surpassed himself. He has often done well, but never so well as this time. Mr. Money, an ardent advocate of the measure, paid him a very high compliment in open session, and others paid the still higher compliment of devoting much of their speeches to him and putting in a good deal of abuse. In the midst of frequent interruptions he showed that battleships are but an experiment and present with the experience so far against them; that from the deductions of science as well as from experience it is proved that we shall soon have ordnance capable of piercing the heaviest armor that a ship can carry and float; that the proposed battleships would draw 26 feet and could enter but a few of our harbors; that the example of England is the very one we should avoid because our conditions are radically different, and that judging by all past experience the vessels would be obsolete because of new inventions by the time they could be completed.

When the [illegible] that it would be [illegible] on the [illegible] Great Britain was under bonds to keep the peace, as she depended on the rest of the world to feed her, and if she should throw her shells into New York she would probably destroy more property belonging to British than American subjects, for her capitalists under the present policy are rapidly getting hold of the property in this country, and by the late [illegible] of Cleveland and Carlisle, Belmont & Co. "have an option on the United States treasury till the 1st of October."

Now, while I intend to lose no fair opportunity to express my private opinion that this nation has about as much use for a big offensive navy as [illegible] preacher has for a pocket pistol, I must say that we are under obligations to the other fellows for the frankness with which they declared their policy. They stated in the plainest English that they intend to enter on a great colonial policy, beginning with Hawaii, and expend many hundreds of millions on the navy, and that as soon as they get the power they will proceed to make it rich by increasing taxation. It is encouraging to know that we shall have clear cut issues in 1896.

Soon after the debate closed, I met Representative Bryan in the document room, and he was all aglow with pleasurable excitement. "Have you read the news? Have you read the full details of the debate in the German parliament?" he asked. "Read it—read it carefully, and then compare it with Sterling Morton's article in The North American Review for this month. Take notice how he ridicules the idea that other countries will ever consent to bimetallism, and how confidently he predicts many things which are already falsified, for Germany has acknowledged the facts we claimed. Our cause is gaining daily, but it will take one more turn of the screw to make the American people act. Prices of farm produce must take another tumble, there must be more panic and bankruptcy and falling wages, and debts must be harder to pay before the voters will rise in protest."

This reminds one that Tom Reed has cut his presidential boom in two by his recent performances. He went just far enough for silver to gain the confidence of the east, and then turned square around and insulted the west, and after ridiculing the bond propositions of the administration he voted for the most absurd and indefensible bond bill of the whole lot. Now take notice of this little sum in arithmetic. With all his prestige as past speaker, speaker to be and leader of the minority, he only got 31 Republicans to go with him in this vote, while 63 voted the other way. Czar Reed's goose is cooked. He will not get a delegate west of Ohio, and east of that he will have to divide the vote in convention with McKinley, Harrison et al. It was worth a dollar to see the smile on the faces of Messrs. Bland, Bryan, Simpson and others just after this vote was taken, and it has since been evident that the Maine statesman is not feeling well.

Apropos to the German parliament's action on silver, the bureau of statistics has just sent in some information rather staggering to those gentlemen who have been telling us that we were soon to be flooded with foreign gold. The plain blunt conclusion of it is every European nation is hoarding gold to an extent unprecedented in its history and that they all want more. Thus in three years Belgium has increased her national bank hoard by $11,000,000, the Netherlands by $5,000,000, Spain by $7,000,000, Italy by $10,000,000, France by $142,000,000, Austria-Hungary by $48,000,000, Germany by $30,000,000 and England by $52,000,000, while Russia has ordered that all her revenues be paid in gold and no gold paid out, and Japan, which made the attempt a few years ago and failed, is now determined to settle her finances after this war on a gold basis. No wonder the representatives of agriculture and labor in the German parliament declared so emphatically that the choice lay between bimetallism and ruin, and that if there was not relief there might be revolution.

March April May

Are the Best Months in Which to Purify Your Blood

And the Best Blood Purifier is

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Which Purifies, Vitalizes and Enriches the Blood.

At this season everyone should take a good spring medicine. Your blood must be purified or you will be neglecting your health. There is a cry from Nature for help, and unless there is prompt and satisfactory response you will be liable to serious illness.

This demand can only be met by the purifying, enriching and elements to be found in Hood's Sarsaparilla.

"My mother-in-law, Mrs. Elizabeth Wolfe, at the age of 72 years, was attacked with a violent form of salt rheum; it spread all over her body, and her hands and limbs were dreadful to look at. At the same time, my little daughter Clara, who was just one year old, was attacked by a similar disease, like scrofula. It appeared in under each side of her neck; had the attendance of the family physician and other doctors for a long time, but seemed to grow worse. I read of many people cured of scrofula by Hood's Sarsaparilla. As soon as we gave Hood's Sarsaparilla to Clara, she began to get better, and before the first bottle was gone, the sores entirely healed up and there has never been any sign of the disease since. She is a Healthy, Robust Child.

Her grandmother took Hood's Sarsaparilla at the same time, and the salt rheum decreased in its violence and a perfect cure was soon effected. It took about three months for her cure, and she ascribes her good health and strength at her advanced age to Hood's Sarsaparilla. It has certainly been a Godsend to my family." MRS. SOPHIA WOLFE, Zaleski, Ohio.

HOOD'S AND ONLY HOOD'S

THE STORY OF THE GUINEA.

England Has Used the Gold Standard Since the Year 1718.

In 1663 it was enacted that all persons might bring their gold and silver to the mint to be coined free of charge. By the mint indentures the gold guinea was coined to be of the value of 20s in silver, but no legal ratio was fixed between the coins; the public was to receive them at such a rating as it pleased. Guineas, instead of being current at 20s, according to the mint indentures, passed current at 22s. The silver coins became constantly more degraded, until at last they were clipped down to half their weight. After the great recoinage by William III., guineas were successively reduced by proclamation, and a treasury warrant fixed that they should be received at the rate of 21s 6d at the treasury. But still all the good silver coin disappeared from circulation as soon as it was issued from the mint.

In its perplexity the government referred the whole matter to Newton, who showed that the true value of the guinea was only 20s 8d, according to the market value of the metals, and that in consequence of this all the good silver was at once exported. He recommended that the guinea should be reduced to 21s by way of experiment. This was accordingly done, but the guinea was still overrated by 4d, and the consequence was that there was no good silver in circulation during the whole of the century. It then became an established custom among merchants that all obligations became payable in gold only; so, ever since 1718 England has become a gold monometallic country, and in public estimation the standard was changed from silver to gold although the obsolete and effete word of bimetallism lingered on the statute book for another hundred years.

At the great recoinage of 1816, that which had become established by mercantile usage was enacted by law. Gold was adopted as the sole standard, and silver was coined only in limited amounts, and made legal tender for only 40s. Ever since then England has enjoyed the most perfect system of coinage ever devised by the ingenuity of man, and has been perfectly free from all coinage trouble.—Nineteenth Century.

"J" in the Name of Rich Men.

Is the homely little crooked letter "J" really a mascot or is it only a coincidence that it is to be found in the given or Christian names of so many millionaires? The recent death of "J." G. Fair has suggested the following compilation of millionaires' names which contain the luck-bestowing letter: J. D. Rockefeller, J. J. Astor, Jay Gould, John M. Searles, J. S. Morgan, J. P. Morgan, J. B. Haggin, J. W. Garrett, J. G. Fair, John Wanamaker, J. W. Mackay, J. C. Flood, J. M. Constable, John T. Martin, and John Arbuckle. None of the above is rated at less than $10,000,000 and several at from six to ten times that sum.—St. Louis Republic.

Take Care of That Cold.

The season of colds, at least the season accepted as such, being upon us, it is well to remind ourselves that the best authority ascribe the prevalence of these distempers to bad indoor air rather than to severe outdoor air. "Cold air," says a writer in a recent magazine, "does not cause throat and lung diseases, but only bad air. The fact that there is a marked increase in these diseases during cold weather he fits to his theory by declaring that such disorders are produced not by the cold air, but by the indoor life that accompanies the season.

"An open fire in every living room in every house," says another enthusiast on the same subject of ventilation, "would do more to lower the death rate from respiratory diseases than any medication or other existing remedial agency." Barring this, he urges frequent airing of rooms constantly occupied, but also insists that the ventilation be done on principles of common sense. "Steam-heated rooms," pursues this carping critic, "particularly in apartments, usually reach a temperature of 80 degrees. This I may say is a mild statement. Any person living in such places endure this or greater heat until it becomes intolerable, and then throw windows open recklessly. The temperature is lowered so suddenly a chill is sure to follow and often serious mischief. Why not take the pains with our lives that the florist does with his plants? The air in a greenhouse is regulated by a thermometer and kept even and pure without a sudden chill or over-heating. It is the high temperature and bad air of our houses that has made us a race of catarrhal wheezers, and not at all, I believe, climatic conditions."—New York Times.

The Possibilities of Sorghum.

The sorghum crop is one that ought to be more generally grown than it is. The crushed canes, after all the sweetness that can be got out of them is extracted, make a good feed for stock. Joshua Daniel, a Kansas farmer, this past year made 183 gallons of syrup from sorghum grown on six square rods, less than an acre. The sorghum also produced 44 bushels of seed, worth 50 cents a bushel. The fodder, syrup and seed from this plat of ground sold for $73.75, which is more than most Eastern farmers get from one acre of land. There are comparatively few localities in the Eastern states where machinery can be found to work the sorghum into syrup. Such machinery requires that a good many farmers grow sorghum so as to keep it employed during the season.

TUNING A PIANO.

A Business that Requires a Training of About Three Years.

"Plunk —plunk— twang— twang—bang!" You have heard those sounds before, though they look a little unfamiliar when reproduced on paper. They represent the performance of a piano-tuner from an outside and tympanic standpoint. They are the tangible and disagreeable part of the necessary business of putting in tune an instrument, which alas! too many people spend a deplorably large portion of their lives in putting out of tune.

This business of tuning pianos, which certainly looks rather mysterious as you watch the manner in which the operator pries up first one string and then another, sounding meanwhile a confused jargon of notes, until the puzzled listener does not know an octave from a fifth, is not, however, as difficult and mysterious as at first it appears.

All that is required is an exact ear and a few simple tools, viz., a tuning fork (usually a C fork), a long, hammer-like key, and a wedge or mute. The accuracy of the tuner's ear is partly a natural gift, partly the result of long practice.

Even the most unpracticed ear can readily distinguish sound from noise. Sound is produced by a regular vibration, while noise is a mixture of sounds thrown together without reference to any law. High notes have a number of vibrations per second, while low notes have a small number. The highest A is calculated to have 3,480 vibrations per second, while the lowest A has only twenty-seven and one-half.

The majority of these tuners have adopted a method of tuning which includes but two intervals—the octave and the fifth. The ordinary square piano has two strings, and most uprights have three strings, to each note, except in the lower octave. The pitch of one of these strings is tuned in the relative of octave or fifth to some previous note. The remaining strings are then tuned in unison with the first string. As the strings approach unison a number of strong and rapid beats or pulsations are perceptible to the ear as they come still closer, the beats become slower, till finally they are no longer to be heard. Then the unison is perfect.

The ear in tuning is guided by progression from a confused sound, to strong beats, and then from smooth waves to one continuous sound. Unisons and octaves are always tuned perfect—that is, the beats must entirely disappear. In the fifths, when perfectly tuned, there will be neither wave nor beat.

It takes generally about three years to learn the business, and a good workman will make from $18 to $35 a week. A few women have been employed as tuners, with great success.—New York Record.

Electric Teeth.

A case of electricity generated by a plate of false teeth occurred recently in England. A man feeling a severe pain in his tongue consulted a doctor and dentist neither of whom could find anything wrong. He then went to an electrician, who found that his false teeth were fastened to the composition plate with two metals. They were connected by wires to a galvanometer, which, as soon as the metals were moistened by the saliva, showed a current strong enough to cause ulceration and severe pain. The plate was covered with an insulating varnish, which put an end to the trouble.

Women and Cold Feet.

A man who has made a study of it called the Tribune reporter's attention to what he said was a fact, that women can stand more cold in their feet than men. He said that, where a dozen men would be found wearing arctic overshoes more than three times that number of women would be found comfortable with ordinary rubbers and that most of the well-dressed women who shop downtown wear no overshoes of any sort.

Malagasy is a general term for the inhabitants of the western and southern parts of the island who are Africans and heathens of the lowest sort. General Shervinton, is an Englishman, the son of Lieutenant Colonel Shervinton, and is forty-two years old. In 1877 he failed to pass the examination necessary to securing a commission in the British army; after which he sailed for South Africa, and joined the native contingent. He continued in this service until 1881, rising to the position of commander of the Cape of Mounted Rifles to which he was promoted by Lord Wolseley. Too Much Gold in American Teeth.

A Frenchman who has been traveling in this country says in Le Temps that what struck him most in the United States was the American habit of filling the teeth with gold. About $500,000 worth of gold is thus used every year, he says, all of which, of course, is buried. Some figures that at the end of three centuries the cemeteries of America will contain gold to the value of $150,000,000. "I am afraid," he adds, "that this will prove too tempting to the practical mind of the future American and we shall see the day when companies will be organized to mine the cemeteries and recover the gold secreted in the jaws of dead ancestors." The writer then goes on and figures on the average amount of gold in the teeth of each dead person. He has evidently been consulting the record of vital statistics, for he says that 875,000 people died in the United States in 1889. This would bring the value of the gold in each dead person's teeth to an average of about 65¾ cents and he thinks that in well crowded cemeteries the mining of this gold could be carried on profitably despite the small average value.—New York Tribune.

Banishing the Pig From the Parlor.

It is gratifying to learn from the report of the congested districts board for Ireland that the efforts to banish the pig from the parlor are calculated to benefit both the pig and his master. Having noted that the board have offered in the Kiltimagh district inducements to small occupiers to provide outbuildings for cattle, as under the present system cattle and pigs spend the night and part of the day in the same apartment as members of the family, the report goes on to say that injurious effects must be produced in the case of people who have to spend many hours amid the effluvia of cattle, while the animals no doubt suffer from the sudden changes from a hot, close atmosphere at night to cold or moist breezes in an unsheltered field or on an exposed hillside during the day.—London Daily News.

Uncleaned Filters.

A correspondent of London Invention writes, with reference to the relative efficiency of water filters in the prevention of infective disease, which must certainly alarm those who rely on filters for the purity of their drinking water: "Some time ago I came across one of the charcoal type which had been accidentally broken, and after splitting the block in half it was found to contain in the center, at the mouth of the passage to the reservoir, a great number of living bodies, somewhat of the shape of tadpoles and visible to the naked eye. Surely this must show that these filters not only do not arrest the germs, but, what is worse, they sometimes offer in themselves a place where these germs can multiply to any extent."

and those soon to become mothers, should know that Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription robs childbirth of its tortures, terrors and dangers to both mother and child, by aiding nature in preparing the system for parturition. Thereby "labor" and the period of confinement are greatly shortened. It also promotes the secretion of an abundance of nourishment for the child.

Mrs. DORA A. GUTHRIE, of Oakley, Overton Co., Tenn., writes: "When I began taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, I was not able to stand on my feet without suffering almost death. NEW LIGHT ON HISTORY.

Henry VIII. as Seen by a Boston Schoolboy.

King Henry 8 was the greatest widower that ever lived. He was born at Anno Domino in the year 1000. He had 510 wives besides children. The 1st was beheaded and afterwards executed.

The 2nd was revoked, she never smiled again, but she said the word "Calais" would be found on her heart after her death.

The greatest man in this reign was Lord Sir Garnet Wolsey. He was sir named the Boy Bachelor. He was born at the age of fifteen unmarried.

Henry 8 was succeeded on the throne by his great-grandmother, the beautiful and accomplished Mary Queen of Scots, sometimes known as the Lady of the Lake, or the Lay of the Last Minstrel.—Boston Commonwealth.

His Father's First Patient.

A few days ago the little son of a well-known physician was entertaining a playmate at his father's house. As children will, they ransacked every nook and corner of the building. Their curiosity led them to explore the recesses of a closet in which the doctor keeps his instruments and other personal effects, among which is a complete skeleton. The strange boy was frightened when he first beheld the grinning remnant of what once had been a human being and started to run away. The doctor's son, however, had seen the skeleton so often that he entertained for it only that feeling of contempt begotten by familiarity and in a little while succeeded in so allaying the fears of his companion that the youngster began to handle the thing and rattle its dry bones. "Where did your father's get it?" he finally asked. "I don't know," was the reply; "but I guess it was his first patient, for he's had it an awful long time."—Butte Miner.

Brussels prides herself in her nobility, Antwerp in her capitalists, Ghent in the halter (this is an illusion to the submission of that city in the revolt of 1540), Bruges in her pretty girls, Louvain in her learned men, and Malines in her fools.

This last refers to the old story of how burglars once saw a great red light burning the tower of their cathedral, and, getting all the fire pumps going, they prepared for the work of saving their great beautiful church says the Boston Commonwealth. What was their mortification and dismay to find that the light was only the red rays of the rising moon shining through the delicate stone-work in the cathedral tower.

DROUGHT PROOF YIELD CORN.

Here is something new. Despite 110 days without a drop of rain, Salzer's new Yellow Dent corn yielded on a large acreage over sixty-eight bushels per acre, while the department of agriculture reports the average yield on corn but a trifle over twenty bushels per acre in the United States. Now think of the possibilities of this corn in a good corn season! It will go double this yield then or 136 bus.

Traveled 3,000 Miles to Dine.

They are telling of a lady in New York, who on a visit to London some time ago, refused an offer of marriage from a young Englishman. On her return to this country she married one of her own countrymen. Recently she gave a dinner and thought it would be a graceful compliment to send an invitation to her former admirer in London. She was amazed when he presented himself on the evening of the dinner, but this was nothing to her surprise when she subsequently learned that he had departed the following day for England, having taken the journey of nearly 6,000 miles apparently to show that he could not be outdone in the compliment business.—Boston Herald.

JUDGE IVES UNDER A CLOUD.

THE LEGISLATURE IS ASKED TO IMPEACH HIM.

A Long Petition From Crookston Containing Charges Against the Populist Judge of the Fourteenth Judicial District—He Is Accused, Among Other Things, of Being Tyrannical Arbitrary and Incompetent, and Numerous Specifications Are Cited to Support the Accusations—Judge Ives Has Something to Say.

Proceedings in impeachment were instituted yesterday in the house against Frank Ives, judge of the Fourteenth judicial district.

Just before noon Mr. Feig asked leave to introduce a petition, which proved to be from citizens of Crookston, praying for the impeachment and removal from the bench of Frank Ives, the judge of that district. The reading of the petition created a sensation, although the peculiar actions of the judge are well known to nearly all the members of the house. When the petition had been read, Mr. Feig moved that it be sent to the judiciary committee with instructions to investigate the charges contained therein and to report their findings to the house as soon as possible. The motion was subsequently changed to a resolution authorizing the committee to administer oaths and summon witnesses. Mr. Gerlach seconded Mr. Feig's resolution, which was adopted without receiving a negative vote. Mr. Feig stated that he did not make any charges, but was well acquainted with the signers of the petition, all of whom he knew to be responsible and reliable men.

Judge Ives is a Populist and has, according to the charges in the petition, been guilty of many crimes and misdemeanors which disqualify him for holding the high office of judge. He is accused of tyranny, partisanship, vindictiveness, malice, and a lack of knowledge of the law. It is also alleged that he has disregarded the claims of justice and of the law, and that his course has been inimical to the people and their interests and incompatible with the duties of a judge.

Text of the Petition.

To the Honorable the House of Representatives of the State of Minnesota:

Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen—The undersigned, your petitioners, respectively request your attention to the following statements and matters concerning the acts and conduct of the Hon. Frank Ives, judge of the Fourteenth judicial district of Minnesota.

First—That at the general election held in November, 1892, the said Frank Ives, then a resident of the city of Crookston, in Polk county, Minnesota, was elected to the office of judge of the district court in and for said Fourteenth judicial district, and in January, 1893, he entered upon and commenced the discharge of his duties as such judge, and has during all the time since continued in the occupancy of said office, and is now acting as such judge, and his term of office will not expire until January, 1899.

Second—That soon after his induction into said office he showed traits of character incompatible with the dignity and sacredness of the high office of judge, and from that time until the present he has, by his repeated acts of usurpation, tyranny, partisanship, vindictiveness, malice and want of knowledge of the principles of law, acted in this disregard of the claims of justice and the law, and inimical to the rights of the people and their interests, and in a manner incompatible with his duties as such judge.

Third—That among the many official acts which he has committed which are improper, disreputable and illegal and which show him to be actuated by corrupt motive in the performance of his duty, and to be unfit to hold the office of judge of said district court, we submit the following:

First—That in the case of the State vs. Neil Combs, a public grain buyer, defendant was convicted at the general term of the district court in and for Polk county, in December, 1892, of the crime of grand larceny in the first degree for stealing wheat of the value of $588. The case, on request of defendant's attorney, was certified to the supreme court, and all the questions raised by defendant were passed upon, by that court adversely to defendant, and his conviction sustained and the case remanded to the district court. That afterwards in the year 1893, said Frank Ives, as such judge, capriciously and arbitrarily and without any cause, set aside the verdict of the jury in said case, he being actuated by partisanship and by the desire of discrediting the acts of his predecessor in his office, before whom such conviction was had, and said defendant was thereby suffered and allowed to escape punishment for the offense for which he had been convicted, and also to escape punishment and trial under several other indictments then pending against him for similar offenses.

Second—That in the case of Fontaine and Anglim against the City of Crookston, tried before a jury in Polk county, at the general December, 1893, term of court in said county, plaintiffs recovered a verdict for $275. The only questions at issue were pure matters of fact, of which the jury were properly the sole and exclusive judges. That thereafter, without cause or reason therefor, except his desire to exercise an arbitrary power and to injure said plaintiffs, as such judge he ordered such verdict to be reduced to $150.

Arbitrary and Partial.

Third—That at the general December, 1893, term of the district court in said Polk county, in the trial of the case of Netzer vs. the City of Crookston, the said judge, through prejudice and bias, wrongfully and unlawfully interfered with and stopped defendant's counsel when outlining his defense to the jury, and stated to him in the presence and hearing of the jury that the only question for the jury to consider was whether or not the defendant allowed its sewer to become defective and stopped up and the sewerage and water therefrom to escape on the plaintiff's premises; that if it did, the defendant city must pay the damages; that the diligence and care used by the city in applying means to prevent or remedy such defect or brake in the sewer had nothing to do with the case, and afterwards stated in his charge to the jury that the defendant city was bound to use extraordinary care in taking care of its sewer. That his general conduct as such judge through the trial of such case was extremely arbitrary and partial. The case was brought to recover from the city damages for injury to property, caused by water escaping from a broken sewer.

Fourth—That at the general November, 1894, term of the district court in Norman county, the said judge presiding, there were seven indictments against one Herringer, and also indictments against four other persons, all residents of Ada, in said county. All of said indictments were for unlawfully selling intoxicating liquors without a license therefor. That he, as such judge, through partiality and disregard of the law, failed and refused to impose on the said persons, after they had pleaded guilty to said indictments, any penalty which the law prescribes, but in violation of the law, and through an agreement with the defendants, imposed as the only penalty and sentence upon each of them, for each indictment to which they pleaded guilty, a fine of $50.

Fifth—That at the general November, 1894, term of the district court in Norman county, the said judge presiding, in the case of the State vs. English, wherein the defendant was being tried on an indictment for a felony, the said judge acted in an extremely partisan and unfair manner toward the defendant, by objecting to competent and material evidence sought to be introduced on behalf of defendant; by sustaining, contrary to law, objections to the admission of evidence on behalf of defendant; by allowing, over defendant's objections, incompetent testimony to be introduced against the defendant; by repeated interruptions of defendant's counsel while arguing defendant's case to the jury; by refusing to charge the jury on behalf of the defendant in accordance to law when he was so requested, and by charging the jury in a manner prejudicial to the defendant and in violation of law. That the general conduct and manner of said judge, in asking questions during the trial, in ruling upon the testimony, in his statements made during the trial in the presence of the jury, in his interruptions of defendant's counsel, and in his charge to the jury, he was harsh and arbitrary, and indicated by such manner and acts clearly to the jury that he desired the defendant's conviction, and defendant was so convicted.

Sixth—That in February, 1895, the grand jury of Polk county made a presentment against one Louis Gonyea, of said county, charging that an offense had been committed in said county, and that they had reason to believe and did believe that he was guilty of the commission of such offense, and said presentment was filed with the clerk of the court of said county; that in violation of the law, and especially of section 49 of chapter 107 of the General Statutes of 1878, the said Frank Ives, as judge, procured a copy to be made of said presentment, and before the said Louis Gonyea had been arrested or had been taken into custody, and before the fact that said presentment had been found had been made public, personally handed said copy to said Louis Gonyea, thereby disclosing to said Louis Gonyea that such presentment had been made, and the nature and contents of the same.

Testified Without Being Sworn.

Seventh—That in the case of the State vs. Tom Hanson, charged with a felony, for an indecent assault on one Mabel Clausen, tried at the January, 1895, adjourned term of said court in Polk county, the said Frank Ives, as judge, while presiding as judge at said trial, suffered and allowed the said Mabel Clausen to testify before the jury on the trial of said case without being sworn against defendant's protest and objection, and afterwards, while said action was being tried and in the presence of said jury, said Frank Ives, as judge, stated to the jury "that the evidence of said Mabel Clausen was undoubtedly true," and charged said jury "that the question of defendant's intent could not be considered by them; that defendant's intent had nothing to do with the case." That the nature of the case and the defense of the defendant were such that from the acts proved and shown the findings as to defendant's intent would be conclusive as to his guilt or innocence.

Eighth—That in the case of the State vs. Russell, Quigley and Dwyer, on proceedings to punish them for contempt of court on Jan. 30, 1895, they were brought under arrest before the said Frank Ives, as judge, at Crookston, Minn., and the said Frank Ives, as such judge, questioned the said Russell relative to said offense, and on the statement by said Russell, who was a stranger to said judge, that one R. J. Montague of Crookston, an attorney at law, had in his office given him, the said Russell, certain advice on a question of law, the said Frank Ives on such statement, in the absence of said Montague, wilfully and maliciously and without any cause, intending thereby to injure said Montague and to discredit him as an attorney, stated to said Russell, and to numerous attorneys and other persons, in open court, "I will not permit Mr. Montague to appear as your attorney in these cases nor to practice in this court until he has purged himself of contempt in this matter." That said Montague had then been retained by said Russell and by one Quigley and by one J. S. Dwyer as their attorney in matters then pending before said judge, and said statement of the judge was there publicly made for the purpose and with the intent to injure said Montague and deprive him of business, and did have the effect of greatly injuring and discrediting him and depriving him of business before said court.

Ninth—That on Jan. 29, 1895, the said Frank Ives, as judge of said court, in an arbitrary and tyrannical manner, without any legal right or cause therefor, wilfully and maliciously ordered the sheriff of said Polk county to arrest and bring before him, as judge, W. D. Russell, Hugh Quigley and J. S. Dwyer to be punished for pretended contempt of said court, and the said persons were by the said sheriff arrested as so ordered, and were on Feb. 1, 1895, brought by the sheriff before the said judge and the said judge then, without any right or authority whatever, and without proofs or evidence, and without any opportunity for defense, sentenced the said Hugh Quigley to pay a fine of $100 for said pretended acts of contempt, and sentenced him to be committed to the county jail of said county for thirty days unless said sum of $100 should be paid, and the said Quigley was thereby compelled to pay into said court the sum of $100 and to incur an expense of $100 to defray his expenses and employ counsel for his defense, and on the same day the said W. D. Russell was by the sheriff brought before the said court on said pretended charge, and without being confronted with witnesses and without any evidence against him, and without being charged with any offense, and without being himself examined or allowed any opportunity to defend himself, the said judge, in a cruel, arbitrary, and through malice sentenced him, the said Russell, to pay a fine of $250, and to stand committed to the county jail for the term of six months if such fine was not paid, and further, to stand committed, in addition to such sentence, to jail for thirty days, thereby sentencing him to be confined in the county jail for seven months, in case he failed to pay such fine of $250, and to thirty days in case he did pay such fine of $250, and immediately ordered a commitment to be made, committing said Russell to the county jail, and refused on defendant's request to stay the proceedings against said Russell, or to admit him to bail, notwithstanding the fact said Russell's attorney then stated, as his reason for asking such stay of proceedings, that he would at once apply to the supreme court to have the legality of the said proceedings, arrest, sentence and committment determined, That such committment was so issued and the said W. D. Russell was thereunder, on Feb. 1, 1895, imprisoned in the county jail of said county. That on Feb. 6, 1895, upon a proper petition having been duly presented to him for a writ of habeas corpus, sued out by said Russell, the said judge did wilfully and maliciously and vindictively refuse to inquire or to examine into the legality of the proceedings or the charge on which said Russell was imprisoned, and did through malice and hatred of said Russell refuse to him, and did deny him, the benefits of habeas corpus, to which he was legally entitled.

That the said Russell, under and by virtue of such arrest and such proceedings and committment, was illegally and unjustly imprisoned in said county jail for a period of ten days, until released by order of the supreme court; that in the same proceedings and on the same charge as that under which the said Quigley and Russell were sentenced, the said judge, through favoritism, and for political reasons, discharged the said J. S. Dwyer without any sentence or punishment whatever.

Tenth—That on Dec. 4, 1894, as such judge, the said Frank Ives, charged the grand jury of Polk county, then in session, that the city officials, the mayor and councilmen, justices of the peace and police officers, were required by law to suppress crime within the different cities of the county. They if crimes are going on, in the different cities, and these officials know it and do not suppress them, they are guilty and should be indicted, and if crimes are being committed and these officials do not know of their commission, they are guilty and should be indicted, for it is their duty to know what is going on. That such charge was given by said judge contrary to law, and with the knowledge of said judge that the same was in violation of the law, and was given by him in that manner for the purpose and with the intent to wrongfully and wilfully influence said grand jury to indict John Cromb, the mayor of the City of Crookston, and one Louis Gonyea, chief of police of said city, and one T. A. Sullivan, mayor of the City of East Grand Forks, and one Hugh Quigley, chief of police of said city. That the said judge repeatedly stated to different persons that he desired to have those persons last above named indicted.

That thereafter, on Dec. 12, 1894, when said grand jury came into court and reported to the court that there was no further business before them, he, the said judge, then presiding in said court, stated to said grand jury: "Gentlemen, you have seen fit to ignore the evidence before you in certain matters, and failed to indict; it is usually customary for the court in discharging the grand jury to thank the jurors for their services, but in this case you do not deserve the thanks of the court, and I discharge you without thanking you for your service as jurors." Thereby informing said grand jurors and the public that he, the said judge, knew and had taken means of ascertaining what evidence and testimony was given and produced before said grand jury, and in violation of section 42 of chapter 107 of the General Statutes of 1878, he thereby questioned the said grand jury and the members thereof on account of their official acts as such jurors.

"Willful Violation of the Law."

That in fact, as such judge, he had been in constant communication with one William Lemon, the foreman of said grand jury, and with other persons, and did suffer and allow and encourage said persons to state to him what evidence and proceedings were being introduced and had before said grand jury, all of which was by him done in willful violation of the law; that he also, after the said jury had been discharged, on Dec. 14, 1894, stated to one W. E. McKenzie and to other persons that he knew and was posted right along what matters and things were being done and what proceedings were taking place in the room of said grand jury during their deliberation, and that he wanted said John Cromb and T. A. Sullivan indicted, and would have been satisfied with said grand jury if they had indicted those two persons.

That for the purpose of humiliating said grand jury and with the intent to show that his desires and views would have to be enforced and carried out the said judge, in the presence of said grand jury and before they had left their seats, in their hearing and in the hearing of a large number of persons in the court room, orally ordered and directed the clerk of said court to immediately issue a venire for another grand jury, to be summoned to appear in said court on Dec 17, 1895.

Eleventh—That at Crookston, Minn., on Jan. 31, 1895, the said Frank Ives, together with one E. D. Childs and another person whose name is to your petitioners unknown, entered into a conspiracy for the purpose of injuring the character of one M. R. Brown and one M. P. DeWolf, and to get one John Cromb and T. A. Sullivan and Louis Gonyea indicted by the grand jury of said county, then in session. That the said judge then caused certain hearsay testimony of one Nolstad to be written down, and advised the said E. D. Childs, as foreman of said grand jury, that such evidence was sufficient on which to find a presentment against said Brown and DeWolf, and there assisted in planning to have said Brown and DeWolf, who were members of said grand jury, excluded therefrom, and to take in place of them as members of said grand jury one Peter Wold and one John L. Finkey, and in pursuance of such scheme the said Brown and DeWolf were on the next day excluded from said grand jury, and said Wold and Finkey, without being summoned or sworn, were admitted to said grand jury, and allowed to deliberate, act and vote with said grand jury, and presentments on such hearsay testimony were on that day found against said Brown and DeWolf and T. A. Sullivan, all of which was unlawfully and wrongfully planned, directed and advised by and in the presence of said judge for the purpose and with the intent to reward and assist the friends of such judge and to injure the said Brown, DeWolf, Sullivan, Cromb, Gonyea and others.

Twelfth—That on Jan. 29, 1895, twelve members of said grand jury voted to indict one Hugh Quigley, but no indictment was written out, signed or delivered to the court on that day. The next day, before any indictment against said Quigley had been delivered into court, it appearing to said grand jury that the vote in favor of said indictment on the previous day had been induced largely, if not wholly, to be given by reason of a false telegram in regard to the acts of said Quigley, which had been read before said grand jury and which was not evidence. A motion was made in said grand jury to reconsider the votes on said indictment. The motion was declared out of order; the question was then referred to the said judge, and he advised the said jury in open court that they had no right to reconsider or withdraw said indictment unless there was further evidence; that thereby an indictment against said Quigley was signed and filed in said court, and the same was assented to by only eleven members of said jury.

Thirteenth—That the said Frank Ives, as judge, has, during each term of the district court, held in Polk county, personally ordered and directed the clerk of court to place upon the jury list the names of certain persons, without such persons having been summoned as jurors, or any venire whatever having been issued for the summoning of such jury. That the following named persons are some of the persons who were by the said judge ordered to be placed upon the jury list, and whose names were by him ordered to be placed in the jury box, viz.:

Christ Johnson, Joe Belair, Fred Cyr, and a large number of other persons, whose names are not now known to your petitioner, but who were selected by said judge personally during each term of said court, during the entire term said judge has been presiding as such judge, in violation of law and for the purpose of depriving the sheriff of selecting or summoning jurors, and to prevent litigants and suitors in different cases from having jurors selected in the manner specified and required by law, and to enable him, the said judge, to have and exercise a greater influence in the decision of cases than he could otherwise have.

Jurors Friends of the Judge.

That the persons so selected by said judge as jurors were almost invariably the personal and political friends of said judge, and were for that reason selected by him.

Fourteenth—That in January, 1895, as such judge, he gave a list containing twenty-one names to the clerk of said court, and ordered him to observe silence in relation thereto, and to cause subpoenas to be issued requiring the attendance of these persons so named on said list, to be and appear before said district court in Polk county at the adjourned term of said court, commencing January 15, 1895; that said list of names was selected by him and the said order given to the clerk to issue subpoenas for the persons so named without the knowledge or consent of the county attorney of said county, and without the knowledge of any person except the said judge himself, and all the persons so named were subpoenaed as so ordered to appear before the grand jury of said county on Jan. 15, 1895, all of which was done without the knowledge or consent of the county attorney or of any person acting on his behalf. All of which acts were done by him as such judge for the purpose of ignoring the county attorney of said county, and to exercise his arbitrary power and to show his authority and contempt of the judgment of others, and wholly regardless of the unnecessary expense thereby caused to said county.

Fifteenth—That said judge has at different times publicly, falsely and maliciously stated that the president of the United States is bought and owned by certain interests; that the supreme court is bought up and paid for their decisions; that the Hon. Ira B. Mills, the judge immediately preceding him in this district, was owned by the gamblers; that the grand jury at the December, 1894, general term of said court was bought up and owned by Tim Sullivan and others.

Sixteenth—That said judge in January, 1894, and at other times, falsely, willfully and maliciously, and without any cause and with intent to injure A. R. Holston, the county attorney of said county, charged that the said A. R. Holston was bought by the defendant in the case of the State vs. Twedten, tried at the general December, 1893, term of said court, and that the said Holston did not perform his duty in the said case.

Seventeenth—That on Dec. 22, 1894, said judge in writing authorized Stephen Sprague, a deputy sheriff of Polk county, Minn., to offer complete immunity from all punishment to all gamblers and keepers of houses of prostitution who would come into court and testify against the officers of East Grand Forks, if they knew of any "evasions" of said officers, and authorized said Sprague to assure such gamblers and keepers of houses of prostitution that if they would so testify they would be protected from prosecution.

Eighteenth—That while said special grand jury was in session in January, 1895, said judge authorized one John Stewart to offer Mabel Mabel, a person charged with being the keeper of a house of ill fame, that if she would come into court and testify against the city officials of East Grand Forks the said judge would protect her; that she might plead guilty to the charge of keeping a house of ill fame and that said judge would remit the sentence imposed on her therefor and protect her from all punishment, and would order all money which she had previously paid in fines returned to her, and authorized said John Stewart to assure said Mabel Mabel that she need have no fear but that she would be protected.

Nineteenth—That on Dec. 22, 1894, he caused an order to be entered in the district court of said Polk county, ordering and requiring that a special venire be issued for a grand jury to appear and meet before said court on Jan. 15, 1895, and on Dec. 12, 1894, discharged the grand jury then in session for the purpose of making and creating a vacancy to enable him to order another grand jury to be summoned and in disregard of the statute and in violation of the law, ordered, directed and procured the said grand jury, which was called for Jan. 15, 1895, and the names of the persons constituting the same to be drawn from certain lists which were uncertified by the county commissioners, and which lists contained the names of only forty-nine persons, and when such grand jury met and assembled he, as judge of said court, was in constant communicatin with E. D. Childs, the foreman of said grand jury, and with others, and suffered and allowed the said Childs and other persons to communicate with him as such judge the testimony which was being given before said grand jury and the votes and acts of the different members of said grand jury, and that he, as judge, used information so obtained to enable him to cause indictments and presentments to be had and made against different persons, and that his manner and conduct and language in discharging the former grand jury and his statements to divers persons made in December, 1894, showing that he knew and was advised of the evidence adduced before the grand jury and of the action of the different jurors was intended to be used and was used by him to coerce the said grand jury to do what he desired should be done.

Refused to Certify.

Twentieth—That on Jan. 31, 1895, one Daniel Sullivan and several other persons were brought up before him as judge in said Polk county for arraignment on indictments found by the said grand jury of said Polk county; that a motion was made to set aside said indictments, and the grounds of such motion were stated and an affidavit made in support of said motion, showing the facts, which did not otherwise appear of record; that he as such judge, upon hearing said motion, overruled the same, and, with the consent of the said Daniel Sullivan, defendant, he as such judge ordered and directed that the indictment against said Sullivan, the motion made to set aside the same and the grounds thereof and all the papers and records referred to or pertaining thereto should be certified to the supreme court for decision and determination of the question so raised by said motion; that the said motion so made and the grounds raised therein would determine the legality of fifty-five other indictments which had been found by said grand jury; that in reliance upon such order and direction the said Daniel Sullivan employed counsel and incurred expense and caused a complete record of the said indictment, motion and papers pertaining thereto to be made, and caused the same to be certified by the clerk of said district court, and the said judge, when said indictment, motion and records were therefore presented to him, to be by him certified to the supreme court, arbitrarily and capriciously stated that he would not certify up the said case; that each of said defendants so indicted would have to stand trial, and that they could appeal in case of conviction. That the said refusal of the judge was without reason and without previous notice, and was after the defendant had gone to quite a large expense in the preparation of said cases and in getting the records prepared and certified to by the clerk of said court.

Twenty-first—That in January, 1895, as such judge, he willfully and unlawfully ordered and directed bench warrants to issue and to be placed in the hands of the sheriff for the arrest of one John R. Johnson and one Campbell, to bring them as witnesses before said court, without any subpoena having been served on said persons, and he, the said judge, at the same time knowing that no subpoenas had been served on said persons, and such bench warrants were so issued and placed in the hands of the sheriff.

Twenty-second—That aside from the foregoing the said Frank Ives is a man not learned in the law, and is generally stubborn, vindictive and oppressive, having but little regard for the rights, characters or abilities of other persons, but having greatly exaggerated estimate of his own abilities, and is vindictive and tyrannical and actuated by an intense desire to exercise arbitrary power, regardless of law or the rights and liberties of others.

Believing the said Frank Ives guilty of crimes and misdemeanors and of corrupt conduct as such judge in office, and that he is unfit to hold such position, we respectfully ask your honorable body to investigate the foregoing charges, and that said Frank Ives be impeached and removed from said office and from holding the office of judge.

THE HAYWARD TRIAL

THE MURDERER OF CATHERINE GING ON TRIAL.

Progress of the Celebrated Murder Case at Minneapolis—The Defense Produces Witnesses in Support of the Third Man Theory.

Minneapolis, March 2.—The end of the long-drawn-out Hayward murder trial is in sight. The case will probably go to the jury Thursday of next week. This is the sixth week of the trial.

The first witness this morning was James Ward, and his evidence was intended to further impeach that of M. D. Wilson, the livery man. He declared that Wilson had told him that Harry Hayward could not be touched, as the man he had seen in the buggy with Miss Ging was not Harry at all. Ward's impression was that Wilson had said Adry was the man, but his impressions were ruled out.

Paul Born, a messsenger who carried a note to Miss Ging the morning of the day of the murder, described the man who sent it. The description did not fit Harry. She had torn the note up after reading it.

Deputy Sheriff Warren swore that Blixt had said when asked how he had kept his feet from getting bloody after the murder, had replied, "By keeping them out of the buggy."

Blixt was sent for from the jail, and pending his arrival his two statements were read to the jury, with some omissions passed on by the court.

The Defense Rests.

Shortly after 11 o'clock the defense rested, having secured a denial from Blixt of the assertions of Witness Warren.

The first witness in rebuttal was Oliver G. Torrence, who went to where the body lay on the night of the murder with the officers. He wore pointed-toe shoes, and walked all around the road at that point. This evidence was introduced to explain the mysterious pointed shoe tracks found by the detectives.

M. B. Griffin, a paperhanger, corroborated Adry's testimony and impeached Harry's by swearing that he found the two together in the Hayward office when he called on Nov. 30. He was not shaken in his identification of the date by Mr. Erwin's cross-examination.

R. R. Odell, attorney for Blixt, denied the story of Maggie Wachter, his stenographer, pointblank, and declared that Blixt had not made the statements with reference to Adry's complicity attributed to him by Miss Wachter.

Edward Eldam was an important witness to corroborate the story of Blixt and show that the shots heard by people at Lake Calhoun were not those fired by the murderer.

John A. Oleson gave evidence to impeach Maggie Watcher's testimony saying that she told him he could make $1,000 by going to the defense and saying he knew Blixt. On the stand Miss. Watcher had denied any such talk with him.

Minneapolis, March 3. — The Hayward murder trial proceeded in spite of the fact that County Attorney Nye is confined to his bed from nervous prostration. It is remarked that while the jury look like ghosts after their six weeks pull at the case, while the lawyers are worn out with work and worry, and while even the judge on the bench looks weary and bored, the defendant, Harry Hayward, comes into court each morning as fresh and smiling as if it were a matinee he was attending. The bad air of the court room, nor the evidence piled up against him seems to affect him.

The state knocked a few more props out from under the defense in rebuttal. Louis Behm swore that he was present at the conversation between Liveryman Wilson and James Ward when the former was alleged to have said that it was not Harry but Adry Hayward he saw driving with Miss Ging on the night of the murder. Behm declared that the Haywards were not mentioned in the whole conversation.

Ernest Gamash testified that he saw George Grindall on the East side many blocks away at the very time when Grindall swears he saw the mysterious "third man" get into the buggy with Miss Ging. Thus are two important witnesses for the defense impeached.

A gun expert was then called to show that the bullets in various makes of cartridges differed in weight. This was to offset Erwin's coup showing that the cartridge used to kill Miss Ging was a 38 long, and not a 38 short, as Blixt testified.

Dr. F. A. Dunsmoor, after a critical examination of the skull, testified positively in answer to a hypothetical question, that the lacerations of the face and the fractures of the skull might have been caused by a fall from the buggy of the body, such as was described by Blixt, or even that the bullet might have caused the fracture.

Mrs. Adry Hayward swore that Adry took her riding the night of April 27, when the hold-up occurred. She denied some of the statements of Harry as to what she had said to him about Adry having a revolver after the quarrel of Oct. 7, and swore that on the date that Adry said he had had the trouble with his brother in the office, Adry came home and procured his revolver.

Adry Hayward corroborated his wife in regard to the drive April 27. He stated that his father and mother made untrue statements when they said he had

Had Threatened to Kill His Brother.

He said that he saw the watch with the deer head on it once in November when his brother was getting some money out of the safe. His brother had not given him money to put in the vault since September.

A Lie Says Harry.

Minneapolis, March 5. — When the state closed its rebuttal there was not a man in the court room, outside the counsel for the defense, who was willing to admit that a reasonable doubt existed as to Harry Hayward's guilt. The finale of the prosecution was sensational in the extreme. Testimony was introduced which ranks in importance next to Blixt's and Adry Hayward's. It was overwhelming, and even Erwin himself, usually so imperturbable, did not attempt to conceal his dismay.

The witness whom Assistant County Attorney Albert Hall employed to produce the climax was George W. Jenks, an investment broker doing business in the Minnesota Loan and Trust company building. In substance his story was that he saw Harry Hayward running along Hennepin avenue one block east of Kenwood boulevard at about 7:15 o'clock.

Jenks left his home at 2120 Fremont avenue south at 7:05 o'clock. He walked down to the junction of the street car lines on Lowry Hill and took the first car that came bound toward the city. He did not enter the car, but stood in the vestibule. When the car reached Loring Park he saw a man running along beside the bill board which skirts the vacant lot east of Kenwood boulevard. To all appearances he was endeavoring to catch the car. The conductor pulled the bell cord and the car slowed down. The man stopped running. Two more jerks of the cord and the car started again and passed the corner.

"Who was the man you saw?" asked Mr. Hall.

"It was Harry Hayward."

"He's a Liar"

hissed the flushed and nervous prisoner. For fully a minute, during which an impressive silence rested upon the court room, the accuser and accused looked each other in the eye. Then Jenks turned his face away and a smile, half of pity and half of mockery curled his lip.

W. W. Erwin referred to that smile later and attempted to argue that it was indicative of insincerity on the part of the witness. Jenks was angry and turned an appealing look to the court. Judge Smith scowled over his eyeglasses and suggested that he postpone his arguments about the witness' appearance until he could properly place them before the jury.

That was not the only tilt between the witness and the attorney for the defense. While Erwin was conducting his cross-examination he said:

"Now, you seem to have a pretty story fixed up and—"

Hall objected and the court sustained the objection, saying that the counsel must treat the witness with respect. Erwin was in an irritable frame of mind and caustically remarked that he would postpone his respect until he knew it was being fittingly bestowed. This put Jenks on his metal and he retorted that as far as he was concerned no postponement of respect was necessary, as he had none for the attorney. Judge Smith became very angry and reprimanded both belligerents.

The peculiar feature of Mr. Jenks' testimony is the manner in which he established his identification of Harry. He admitted that he did not know the defendant even by sight, but happened to be near the jail one day shortly after the trial began and saw Harry run with his escort of deputies and police officers. That settled it; it was the identical run of the man on Hennepin avenue—the most peculiar run Jenks had ever seen.

Erwin's best efforts failed to shake the witness' story.

Another Sensation.

The cream of the sensations came after court had been adjourned. Judge Smith had passed out into the ante room and the crowd had disappeared. A dozen newspaper men and deputies remained. Adry Hayward was sitting at the rear of the railed enclosure and Harry beside the attorney's table. The latter suddenly turned upon Erwin and said: "It makes me tired to see that — — brother of mine get off and I held here as a prisoner."

Erwin made some soothing remark, but it was unnoticed. Harry continued: "I've a good mind to have a warrant sworn out and get the — — fool locked up. Lord knows he deserves it."

"It's hard, I know, but better be calm," replied the attorney; "you can have him arrested later."

"No, that won't do. He's done enough to injure me. I'll fix the — — —."

At every word Harry's passion rose higher and higher; he was flushed and trembling.

"Don't lose your temper," admonished Erwin.

Harry paid no attention. "I've a notion to give it to the newspapers now. Funny that a man should be such a child of misfortune as to be burned out five times. I can send him to the penitentiary for twenty years."

By this time Adry had put on his coat and started to go out. He saw his brother's agitation and stopped.

Harry saw him. His fury broke loose in a terrible threat: "Oh, I'll have you wearing stripes inside of a year. You won't need a deputy to watch over you then."

Adry merely smiled. It was not a smile betokening either amusement or scorn. It was a smile of commiseration. He replied: "Harry, I wish something better for you: I hope you will get out and go free all the rest of your days."

"I'll see who gets the worst of this, you contemptible —. I'll fix you. Why, I know enough about you to send you to Stillwater for ten years."

Adry did not make reply. Harry caught his breath and began again. "I can prove that you are a highwayman and have set five fires. If that isn't enough I can bring out something that will."

At this point the deputy sheriffs interfered and the encounter closed. Deputy Marsh hurried Adry off, and in three minutes Harry was his old self.

It was an awful display of temper, and just what one might expect from a man who feels the gibbet's noose tightening about his neck.

Nearly a Century Old.

St. Paul, March 5.—Mrs. Maria Angella Haupers, wife of Peter Haupers, died at the residence of her son-in-law, George Mitsch, of 237 Pleasant avenue, Friday night. The cause of her death was bronchitis, with which she was taken on the previous Sunday. She was born in Grosslittgen, Germany, June 18, 1800, and was therefore ninety-five years old. She came to America in 1846, settling in Chicago, and removed to St. Paul in 1855.

$1,000,000 RHEUMATISM.

Chicago, May 1, 1894.

The Swanson Rheumatic Cure Company, 167 Dearborn street, Chicago, Ill.—

Dear Sirs—I can highly recommend your "Schrage's Rheumatic Cure" to all who suffer from rheumatism. A year ago last January while on a visit to Liverpool, Eng., I was stricken down with an attack of acute inflammatory rheumatism, and confined to my bed for seven or eight weeks. I had another attack a few weeks later in Berlin, and a third in Paris. I had the very best medical attention, but could not get cured. I returned to Chicago about the end of April, very weak, still suffering and grew very much worse. My joints were fearfully swollen; I suffered great pain. I consulted eminent doctors but could get no relief.

Finally I was induced to try a bottle of Schrage's Rheumatic Cure, and I can frankly say that before I had taken half of one bottle I began to get relief. I took only four bottles in all and have not had any return of the painful disease. Therefore, I consider myself cured. Yours truly,

HERBERT E. RYCROFT.

FORCED TO TELL.

An Ohio Farmer is Brutally Tortured and Robbed.

Toledo, March 6.—Joseph Shonbrick, living thirty-five miles northwest of here was brutally tortured and robbed late last night. He is a well-to-do German farmer who has kept his money about his premises. About dawn this morning four masked men entered his house and first bound and gagged the fifteen-year-old daughter who slept in a room off the kitchen. The others were then seized. The twelve-year-old boy and the elder daughter were bound and gagged. The old man and his wife were easily overpowered. The old man was ordered to point out the hiding place of his money. He denied having any, but one of the men told him if he repeated the story his head would be blown off. He took them to his sleeping room and tore up the carpet under the side of the bed next the wall and brought out about 1,200 in bills. Three of the men were about to leave when the leader told them he knew there was more than that in the house. The old man denied it.

The cook stove was filled with wood and soon a red-hot fire warmed up the room. The men took Shonbrick and held him over the flames after removing the stove lids until his feet and the calves of his legs were terribly burned, yet he remained obdurate. Again they held him over the stove until the pain caused him to faint. They then seized Mrs. Shonbrick and threatened the daughters with indignities, but all denied knowledge of any more money in the house.

The men then took the old woman and held her over the flames until she was terribly burned. She refused any information. Again they raised her over the hot stove when she screamed that she would tell where the rest of the money was hidden. She was then so badly burned they were compelled to carry her. She directed them to the cellar, where under a barrel was concealed over $1,000, which they took and hastily left the house.

SHE'S NOW A COUNTESS.

Miss Anna Gould Is Married to Count De Castellane.

New York, March 6.—At noon under a canopy of royal purple Miss Anna Gould was wedded to Count Paul Ernest Boniface de Castellane. The ceremony was performed in the East Indian room of the Gould mansion which had been converted into a veritable garden of beauty. The wedding procession formed in the library just above the oriental room and from there passed through the great hall, hung with garlands of asparagus vine, entwining lilies of the valley and white roses. The staircases had been hidden by masses of Easter lilies while the walls of the adjoining rooms had been banked high with thousands of American beauty roses and blossoms of every description.

Archbishop Corrigan officiated and the bridal party was formed as follows: First came the ushers, Prince del Drago, Raoul Duval, Brockholst Cutting and Howard Gould. Following them came Miss Anna Gould with her brother, George J. Gould. The little pages, Masters Kingdon and Jay Gould, bore the bride's train, and after the bridesmaids, the Misses Helen Gould, Beatrice Richardson, Catherine Cameron and Adelaide Montgomery. Just as the marriage was being performed 1,000 poor children were feasting at the industrial schools of the city on the good things provided by the generosity of the bride and her sister, Miss Helen Gould.

O'CONNOR IN THE SADDLE.

The New Marshal Names W. M. Campbell as One of His Aides.

St. Paul, March 6.—R. T. O'Connor qualified as United States marshal before Judge Priest to-day, and gave an official bond in the sum of $40,000, with William Dawson, Robert A. Smith, William Hamm and George W. Wentworth as sureties. The bond was approved by the judge. There were several friends present at the ceremony of qualification, and Mr. O'Connor shook hands all around after it was over. Marshal O'Connor announced the following members of his staff: J. M. Reading, Col. Tim Sheehan and W. M. Campbell, the former marshal. There are several more to be made.

W. C. Coup Dead.

Jacksonville, Fla., March 6.—W. C. Coup, of circus fame, died of pneumonia to-day.

Street Battle.

Richmond, Ky., March 6.—Richmond had a street battle between policemen and Tom Graves, a mountain desperado, who was drunk. He fired his gun as he rode through the principal streets. The officers chased and fired. Graves was shot in the head, back and shoulders, but rode a mile before falling from his horse. He was taken to jail where he will die. A brother, William Graves, is now at large in this county, having escaped from the penitentiary, and he also defies arrest.

There is no telling where the trouble resulting from a mortgage will end. An exchange tells of a man who mortgaged his farm to get his wife a pair of ear rings. The wife took in washing to pay interest on the mortgage, and the first day lost one of the diamonds in the suds, and tried to hang her self in the barn, but the rope broke and she fell on a $150 cow and broke its back.

Jackobson's county option bill is showing considerable strength, and the liquor men are much worried over it. It has been reported favorably by the temperance committee of the house and is likely to pass that body. The senate is not so favorably disposed, and it may be killed there. Should the bill become a law Polk county, and in fact every county in the Seventh congressional district, would undoubtly vote no licence.—Crookston Times.

A new county division scheme has been sprung. Petitions are being circulated asking the government to issue a proclamation for an election upon the proposition to divide Polk County into three parts, making McIntosh, Thief River Falls and Crookston county seats. We understand, Erskine parties are also circulating a petition to divide the county. Their plan takes in about 26 townships, and includes the town of Garfield. The temporary county seat is located on a farm half ways between Erskine and McIntosh.

He will get comps to all the harp recitals and have a reserved seat by the side of editors, while all of the deliquent subscribers will have to carry water for the performers and sit up in gallery.—Tracy Republican.

Impeachment proceedings were begun against Judge Ives in the legislature by ten, of the 15000 voters of the 14th judical district last Tuesday whose interest were threatened by the Judge's recent crusade against the disreputable houses and gambling dens in the district. All law abiding citizens side with the Judge in this matter and there is no doubt but that he will be sustained. The matter will come before the judiciary committee of the House of Representatives next Wednesday. Attorney Steenerson O'Brien and Miller will conduct the defense.

The United States Supreme Court has decided one of the most important case in the history of the country. The decision is that all patents expire at the time as the patents secured previously in foreign countries. Six hundred million dollars capital was hinged on the result of the case. The Bell Telephone company is as heavily affected as any of the companies that do business all over the country. Much money was spent by the companies who had so much at stake, to defeat the case in the courts. In some cases this decision will cause patents to expire that would have from 10 to 15 years to run under the old decison.—Crookston Tribune.

It has probably dawned upon the administration that issuing bonds at this time is very distasteful to the people and so the argument is now made that the secretary of the treasury is not selling bonds; he is buying gold. Just so! The man who sells a load of wheat is not selling wheat but he is buying money. And the man who gives a mortgage on his home to get a thousand dollars does not part with the mortgage, but buys dollars. It reminds us of the story about an indian trader who saved his conscience by offering the indian his choice in a dicker, by saying: "I will take the bearskin and you take the dollar or you can take the dollar and I will take the bearskin."—Norman County Herald.

The delay in opening of the reservation will continued in our next as usual. The opposition of Senator Davis has been based ostensibly upon a fear that the state would be deprived of its rights in the school lands, and this has been his reason for opposing the bill and preventing its passage. Now we are told that the department is preparing a decision which concedes the claim of the state and that Mr. Davis, objections are removed. This will in no manner result in the passage of the Baldwin's bill for the opening of the reservation, it is too late to take any action this session. This announcement is in line of the probabilities as forecasted by the belief that the Minneapolis pine land owners have not intended that the reservation pine should not come on the market until it suited their pleasure and convenience.—Crookston Times.

To the Members of the People's Party, Greeting:

As early as 1865-6 a conspiracy was entered into between the gold gamblers of Europe and America to accomplish the following purposes: To fasten upon the people of the United States the burdens of perpetual debt; to destroy the greenbacks which had brought us safely through the perils of war; to strike down silver as a money metal; to deny to the people the use of federal paper and silver, the two independent sources of money supply guaranteed by the constitution; to fasten upon the country the single gold standard of Britain, and to delegate to thousands of banking corporations, organized for private gain, the sovereign control, for all time, over the issue and volume of all supplemental paper currency. Thus they doubled the demands for gold, forced upon the country an appreciating money standard, entailing an indefinite period of falling prices; robbed enterprise of its just profits, condemned labor to idleness and confiscated the property of debtors.

For nearly 30 years these conspirators have kept the people quarreling over less important matters while they have pursued with unrelenting zeal their one central purpose. At the present moment every device of treachery, every resource of statecraft and every artifice known to the secret cabals of the international gold ring is being made use of to deal a final deathblow to the prosperity of the people and the financial and commercial independence of this country. They seek to accomplish their fell purpose before the blow can be averted by an awakened public through the ballot. Their plans have been long matured, and their line of action is fully shown. They address themselves to the one subject, the money question, in all of its breadth and magnitude. This brings the country face to face with a perilous issue, which calls for immediate and united action on the part of the people. Every behest of patriotism requires that we shall at once meet the issue and accept the challenge so defiantly offered.

To falter now is to invite disastrous failure. We earnestly urge the Populists throughout the country to concentrate their entire force and energy upon the tremendous contention presented and thus meet the enemy upon his chosen line of battle. Invite the aid and cooperation of all persons who favor the immediate free coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1, the issue of all paper money by the general government without the intervention of banks of issue and who are opposed to the issue of interest bearing government bonds in time of peace—in a word, to extend the hand of fellowship to all who agree with you upon the money question, which is certainly the mightiest and most fundamental controversy evolved during the present century.

Cost of the Gold Standard.

To maintain the gold standard permanently all forms of currency except gold must be contracted and bank credits restricted and the price level in this country forced enough below the price level of other countries to turn gold this way. As prices go down, of course wages, salaries and everything else that enters into the cost of production must follow. There is no other way. To attempt anything else is but temporizing. That this is not an easy road to travel is manifest enough, but it is the price of the gold standard, and if that standard is to be permanently maintained the price must be paid sooner or later, and the longer it is put off the more it will cost in the end.

It makes no difference in maintaining the gold standard whether the gold comes from or passes through the treasury of the United States or whether it goes directly from banks or other hoards. It is purely a question of the outflow of gold, and it takes just as much—and the effect in the end is precisely the same—whether it is derived from one source or from another as long as it reduces the stock of gold in this country. The gold standard can be maintained only by keeping gold here, and gold can be kept here only by lowering prices till the tendency of gold is toward us instead of away from us. The flow of gold is in the end a question of price level and nothing else.—A. J. Warner in New York Sun.

Kolb and His Associates.

I may describe Captain Kolb as I saw him in his Birmingham office. He is a tall, well formed man with distinct traces of education, refinement and good breeding. He talked quietly and without excitement. He neither looked nor acted like a demagogue. He was courteous in manner, said nothing that was abusive or even unkind of Governor Oates and conducted himself like a respectable, well bred southern gentleman. If he be the conscienceless conspirator whom his enemies denounce, his benevolent, smiling face is an artistic mask for the deviltry which is alleged to be going on behind it. The main burden of his talk was the imperative necessity for the enactment of honest election laws and some constitutional means for determining whether a governor of Alabama has been legally or illegally elected. As for Captain Kolb's associates in his movement against the machine Democracy, they are not disreputable political adventurers, as his opponents assert.—Cor. New York Tribune.

Michigan Populists.

The People's Party of Michigan, in state convention, assembled at Greenville, have nominated candidates for supreme court justice and regents of the university who are to be voted upon at the spring election. R. D. Taylor of Bay City was nominated for justice of the supreme court, and George H. Smith of Benzie and V. J. Bowers of Macomb were named for university regents. The Populists are the first in the field in Michigan.

Will Not Trust the People.

Senator Peffer has introduced a proposition submitting to the people at a special election the various financial questions agitating the country. It may be depended on as an assured fact that neither congress nor the president would consent to leave anything to the people, that pays the dictators at Washington such profits as they realize from manipulating the finances.—Chicago Express.

It Looks a Little Suspicious.

The failure of the administration to make a better bargain has the effect of arousing a suspicion that some one has been permitted to enter on the ground floor to the exclusion of others who should have been given an equal opportunity.—Wilmington News.

THE SEESAW GAME.

BANKERS CORNERED UNCLE SAM FOR THEIR PRIVATE PROFIT.

Gold They Shoveled In at Noonday They Stealthily Wheeled Away at Night—All Gain, With No Chance to Lose—Patriotism of New York Bankers.

The study of the bond issue, with the bargain between the high contracting parties as a guide, only makes it the more plain that the poor, battered government is having a very hard time of it in the midst of its surrounding flock of interested financial practitioners.

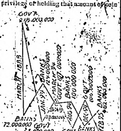
The whole situation would almost justify a plain spoken observer in saying that from the start every move has been in the direction of forcing the government into a corner for private profit.

There certainly has been no deal of recent years which promises so much clear and sure profit as do these three bond issues, from which the government derives not one penny for permanent profit, as it might from a loan for internal improvements, or for a navy, or for any one of a dozen uses.

Instead the government has simply refilled a vault which these same financiers have been visiting very frequently of late and from which they have carried away the millions they are now so busily carrying back. It is now a simple matter of record, and it is very easy to make up a schedule showing just how the figures must stand on the books of the syndicate.

There is the date far off when everything was going on in normal fashion, when the banks were busy with customers and had not started on the wholesale milking of the treasury. Then the game began, and without having a single legal use for a gold dollar over a paper or a silver one the banks piled up $129,000,000 of specie, mostly in gold coin. They saw that precious gold reserve go past the hundred million mark in April, 1893. Then it vacillated back and forth until by the end of the year everything was ripe for a profitable bond deal.

It came. There was a scramble, apparently a very reluctant one, and for the nominal use of $50,000,000 in gold for ten years—really for the hollow privilege of holding that amount of coin for a few months—the government is paying and has made obligation to pay out what will net the bondholders $18,000,000 in interest, and then the original $50,000,000 will be demanded in gold, and then the deal will close.



It was an excellent scheme, and so easy that all that seemed necessary was a strong man with a barrow to carry the gold from the subtreasury; then a turning loose of the tamtams of alarm, and the closing months of the year found the trap set again. There had been hoarding generally to help it on, and the poor government had been coining up its bullion at the rate of $4,000,000 a month to hold up its end of the game.

But majorities governed, and while it is doubtful whether there is one financier in the government there is certainly a whole horde of them outside, and now, with a bare two months' breathing spell, the trap is ready to be sprung again. This time matters are pushed with a bolder hand. Instead of a modest interest rate, fitly recognizing the fact that no nation on earth is better entitled to a low interest rate than the United States, this last bargain calls for what is practically a usurious rate and has with it other assurances which make it, in the language of the paddock, a "cinch."

The wires from Wall street to Washington were kept hot, and as often before, wittingly or not, the lawmakers and the loanmakers worked together in perfect harmony.

Why the table which The World presents should not go on to a fourth loan and so onward and onward is not because the financiers would have it otherwise. Loans, with promises of over $110,000,000 or even more, with the active use to which money is put by alert lenders, are too good to let go by, and if those who are enjoying the golden eggs do not scare off or kill the goose there is no knowing where the series will close or how.

There are today great quantities of unused cash in the banks. Savings banks are particularly on the alert for such investments as long time government bonds, because of their absolute safety and of their legality under the banking law. These banks have abundant gold stored away. This they can do readily and secretly, since no statistics are weekly published of their accumulating hoard, as in the case of the discount banks.

Now, these hoards are pouring out, and at the head of the list of those shoveling in gold for the new bonds is the name of a firm which makes a very profitable specialty of supplying banks with bonds for investment. Having used up the gold then in hand for the purchase of these bonds, it is to be presumed that the savings bank trustees will leave no effort untried until their vaults are again lined with gold, and yet there is not the least obligation on the part of these banks to pay out gold.

With the least suspicion of an inkling

An Invitation to Dinner.

In his private capacity the Hindu is frequently very hospitably inclined. The fact that his caste prejudices preclude him from eating with Europeans does not always prevent him offering an invitation to dinner—his idea of English hospitality. This consists of his driving his guests to a hotel and paying for dinner, while he awaits its consumption in another part of the house. It takes one some little time to get used to this mode of procedure, but after a while one sees the propriety of accepting the kindness in the spirit which prompts it.—Chambers'.

Again the Chignon.

With the sanction of Queen Victoria, the old-fashioned chignons or heavy head-dress of false hair, and which was all the rage with the feminine community in the '50s and '60s, have again come into style, and the artificial hair dealers, whose trade has been languishing for years, are delighted with the prospect of being once more in clover. The reintroduction of the fashion is placed to the credit of the princess of Wales, whose back hair has been getting remarkably thin of late, and as a result of which she is determined to revert to a style prevailing at the time of her marriage thirty years ago.

The nobility and aristocracy have lost no time in falling into line, and almost daily the streets outside the leading lady hair dressers have been blocked for hours with swell equipages.

Queen Victoria, who has always had a weakness for this style of head-dressing, looks upon the revival with favor, and the Court Gazette will announce that chignons will be de rigueur at all future drawing-room levees and other court functions.

AN ALPENA MIRACLE.

MRS. JAS. M. TODD OF LONG RAPIDS DISCARDS CRUTCHES.

In an Interview With a Reporter She Reviews Her Experience and Tells the Real Cause of the Miracle.

From Alpena, Michigan, Argus.

We have long known Mrs. Jas. M. Todd of Long Rapids, Alpena County, Mich. She has been a sad cripple. Many of her friends know the story of her recovery; for the benefit of those who do not we publish it to-day.

Eight years ago she was taken with nervous prostration, and in a few months with muscular and inflammatory rheumatism. It affected her heart, then her head. Her feet became so swollen she could wear nothing on them; her hands were drawn all out of shape. Her eyes were swollen shut more than half the time, her knee joints terribly swollen and for eighteen months she had to be held up to be dressed. One limb became entirely helpless, and the skin was so dry and cracked that it would bleed. During these eight years she had been treated by a score of physicians and has also spent much time at Ann Arbor under best medical advice. All said her trouble was brought on by hard work and that medicine would not cure, and that rest was the only thing which would ease her. After going to live with her daughter she became entirely helpless and could not even raise her arms to cover herself at night. The interesting part of the story follows in her own words:

"I was urged to try Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People, and at last did so. In three days after I commenced taking Pink Pills I could sit up and dress myself, and after using them six weeks I went home and commenced working. I continued taking the pills, until now I begin to forget my crutches and can go up and down stairs without aid. I am truly a living wonder.

"Now, if I can say anything to induce those who have suffered as I have to try Pink Pills, I shall gladly do so. If other like sufferers will try Pink Pills according to directions, they will have reason to thank God for creating men who were able to conquer that terrible disease, rheumatism. I have in my own neighborhood recommended Pink Pills for the after effects of la grippe, and weak women with impure blood, and with good results."

Mrs. Todd is very strong in her faith in the curative powers of Pink Pills, and says they have brought a poor, helpless cripple back to do her own milking, churning, washing, sewing, knitting and, in fact, about all of her household duties.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50c per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

His Broken Rest.

It seems the tax collector had been diligently searching for Oscar a considerable time, when one morning he discovered the descendant of the O'Flaherties issuing from his house, in Tite street. The collector demanded certain payments, which Oscar refused to make.

"But, Mr. Wilde, this is your house; you occupy it. I've just seen you coming out of it. You must live there."

"Most positively I do not."

"At any rate," retorted the now slightly exasperated man, "you do what legally constitutes living in the house. You sleep there. You don't deny that."

"But, my dear man," Oscar answered languidly, stifling a yawn, "you must consider. I sleep so badly."—The Chap Book.

ALLEGED BRIBERY.

Duluth Has a Little Sensation on the Side.

Duluth, Minn., March 6.—A great sensation was caused in Duluth today by the publication by the Herald of the details of an alleged attempt to bribe members of the city council to support what is known as the Clyne water works proposition. Originally this proposition, which was made by John Clyne, a sewer and street contractor of West Duluth, was for the construction of a pumping station, a water main extension to Lester river, and a duplicate of the present plant in the city owned by the Duluth Gas and Water company. When a special election resulted in a majority in favor of the city purchasing the company's plant, the Clyne proposition was modified so as to embrace only the construction of a new pumping station and a water main extension to connect with the old plant which the city has voted to purchase from the Duluth Gas and Water company. Those pushing the scheme wanted the city to award them a contract without advertising for bids, in the sum of $800,000. Bonds for the faithful performance of the work were offered in the sum of $100,000, with W. J. Holmes and H. H. Phelps as sureties. The city fathers did not see anything to be gained by doing away with the regular custom of advertising for bids, although W. J. Holmes lobbied persistently in its favor. The scheme was supposed to be dead until a few weeks ago Holmes again began to cultivate the acquaintance of the aldermen and several other men commenced a campaign in behalf of the Clyne proposition. Finally Holmes approached Ald. Cox and is said to have offered him a bribe, and he was to give other aldermen $2,500 each. Holmes came here about four years ago from Fergus Falls and established a woolen mill at New Duluth which subsequently failed, since when he has been dealing in municipal bonds and mortgages.

Appropriation Bills Signed.

Washington, March 6.—All the appropriation bills have become laws, the president having affixed his signature to the last of them to reach him—the naval and general deficiency appropriation bills.

For Free Coinage.

Washington, March 6.—The meeting of the members of the American Bimetallic league, which has been in progress here during the last two weeks, will very soon issue an address to the American people asking their support for a new party having for the principal planks of its platform the free and unlimited coinage of silver at the ratio of 16 to 1 and demand that the money of the country shall be issued by the government itself.

A Train Load of People Thrown From a Canon.

City of Mexico, Special.—An excursion train coming into the city on the Inter-Oceanic railroad met with an accident this afternoon. While rounding a curve on the side of a mountain five coaches jumped the track and fell down the canyon. Forty-two people were killed and thirty or more seriously injured. The accident occurred about forty kilometers from this city. The telegraph wires have been down and it has been impossible so far to obtain any details of the awful disaster.

WARNING TO FARMERS.

Will Miss It if They Fail to Improve This Opportunity.

A few years ago, owing to quite an extended drought, the corn crop of the Southwest was a partial failure, and the farmers of that locality found themselves short of food for their hogs, the result being an intemperate haste to sell off their entire holdings of hogs, including their brood stock, thus leaving them without the means of quickly resuming the business of hog raising. As a natural result of their unbusinesslike methods, the following year hog prices advanced to eight cents per pound at South St. Paul, but most of the farmers of Minnesota were not able to avail themselves of this advantageous market condition, as their brood stock had been bustled off to save feeding high-priced corn.

We are just now confronted with a similar condition, with this exception: Minnesota has an abundance of cheap small grain with which to carry over to next year its brood stock, while the farmers in the corn countries to the south of us have neither corn nor other grains, and are forced to dispose of their breeding stock, and trust to time and a future crop of corn to make a fresh start. Hogs are likely to bring excellent prices all of next summer and winter, owing to the conditions mentioned. Will our farmers have the business ability to take advantage of the situation? Don't sell off your breeding hogs, but make ample preparation for a goodly supply, and remunerative prices next fall and winter.

Future of Northwestern Pork Business.

Minnesota and Dakota have gained an enviable notoriety in the quality of their wheat. There is no reason why they should not gain a like notoriety in the production of meats, especially pork. It seems to be a natural law that animal as well as vegetable life attains a hardiness and vigor in the North which is impossible in the warmer Southland.

It is well known that the hams and bacon which command the highest price are produced in Yorkshire, England, and there the hogs are fattened almost exclusively on barley meal and potatoes. Balancing the ration with this vegetable, gives it a juiciness which is impossible to produce with a purely carbonaceous diet. North Dakota and Minnesota have demonstrated, to their own profit and the benefit of the balance of the country in this year of drought, their ability to raise potatoes in abundance, and with wheat at such low figures and barley (which would be much better employed in making pork than beer) there is no reason why this should not produce pork meats of such quality as to gain a name for itself like wheat of No. 1 hard.

Now one word as to the method of feeding. The hog is not a ruminating animal and consequently all the chewing his food gets is before he swallows it; and as by the action of the jaw in chewing, the gastric juice necessary for digestion is pumped into and mixed with the food, so it follows the slower he eats and the more he chews the better it is for him. Now, if you feed, say, twenty hogs so much grain every day you will find that 50 per cent of the hogs will eat 75 per cent of the grain, and consume it so ravenously that it is impossible to realize the best results. This principle has been demonstrated in the fattening of sheep without a self-feeder. If this is true of sheep, which ruminate, it is much more so of hogs, which do not. Then for feeding wheat and barley, let them be put through a roller mill enough to break the berry, and place in a self-feeder, made like those for sheep. Keep them full. Another advantage of this method of feeding is that it is not necessary to provide trough room for more than 25 per cent of the hogs, as they soon find out that the feed is there all the time, and there is no crowding, the small pigs having equal chance with the large ones. They eat slowly and chew vigorously, and so get the greatest possible benefit. Of course, when potatoes are fed it will be necessary to boil or steam them, and mix with a portion of the meal, but even then it will pay to put in a feeder.

BILLIONS OF DAMASK BUDS.

Vast Numbers of Them Gathered Every Year to Make Attar of Roses.

Since the emancipation of the Balkan provinces the manufacture of attar of roses has become a great industry in Bulgaria, and has been taken up on a large scale in Germany, says London Public Opinion. We have all been accustomed to connect the fabrication of attar of roses with Persia and Syria, and even now India and Constantinople furnish probably the largest markets for it; but, although the art of making it was discovered in Persia, the manufacture has nearly or quite died out and the center of the business is now the country about Kazanlik, on the south slope of the Balkans, close to the Shipka, or Wild Rose Pass, famous in the history of the Russo-Turkish war. The rose-growing belt is situated at an average altitude of 1,000 feet above the sea, and extends to a length of about seventy miles, with an average breadth of ten miles. On this ground are produced annually from 5,000,000,000 to 6,000,000,000 rose blossoms.

The number of varieties cultivated is very small. Ninety per cent of all the blossoms are taken from a bushy variety of the rosa Damascena, or damask rose, known to our gardeners mainly as the ancestor from which the infinite variety of hybrid perpetual roses derive a large part of their blood. Of the remaining 1 per cent a part are gathered from the white musk rose, which is frequently planted as a hedge around the fields of pink Damascena, while the rest are furnished by a dark red variety of Damascena. Other sorts of roses have been tried, but some yield no attar at all, and others give an essence having the perfume of violets or pineapples, or hyacinths rather than of roses.

Makes Pure Blood
These three words tell the whole story of the wonderful cures by Hood's Sarsaparilla. When the blood is impure it is fertile soil for all kinds of disease germs, and such troubles as scrofula, salt rheum, rheumatism, catarrh, grip, and typhoid fever are likely to appear.
Weak nerves indicate as surely as any physical symptom shows anything, that the organs and tissues of the body are not satisfied with their nourishment. They draw their sustenance from the blood, and if the blood is thin, impure or insufficient, they are in a state of revolt.
Hood's Sarsaparilla
Purifies the blood and thus cures these diseases by removing their cause. No other preparation has ever accomplished the remarkable cures which have followed the use of Hood's Sarsaparilla.
To purify and vitalize the blood, and thus supply the nourishment which is needed. Those who keep their blood pure with Hood's Sarsaparilla have no trouble with weak nerves. Therefore take Hood's now.

NAPOLEON'S USE OF ARTILLERY.

How He Deceived the Enemy by the Number of His Field Pieces.

"In all the recent discussion of Napoleon and his methods," said a gentleman who helped to settle the late unpleasantness and is still deeply interested in military science, "I have not seen attention called to a feature of his style of fighting, which undoubtedly had much to do with his wonderful success. It was an essential part of his great art of being the strongest, to use his own happy phrase, to give the enemy, wherever possible, an exaggerated idea of his forces. This is part of the secret of his victories over superior numbers, which military tacticians love to write about.

"He placed great reliance upon the artillery arm of the service, not only for breaking an army into sections, but for dealing with each section at a time. He preferred comparatively light, smooth bore field pieces to the heavier guns, which created more havoc when once in position, but were hard to move about. The execution of his lightning-like maneuvers required that his guns should be moved rapidly.

"In equipping an army there is a certain fixed proportion preserved between the number of men and the number of cannon in each division, so that if you know how many guns an enemy is training on you, you can usually form a fairly accurate idea of the number of men he has. Napoleon took advantage of this rule by violating it. That is to say, the number of his cannon was out of all proportion to the number of his men. When he had succeeded in separating the forces of the enemy into, say, three divisions, either by sheer hard fighting or by strategic movements, he would open up with his cannon at close range on the first division. The opposing commander, judging from the number of pieces, would suppose he had 60,000 men, when in reality he had 40,000, and rush a courier as quickly as he could send him to the next division with the news. The commander of the second division would send it on to the third, probably adding a few figures of his own, so that Napoleon's fighting resources were magnified out of all proportions. In this way he frequently had the other sections half-whipped before he got around to them.

"From his use of these smooth bore field pieces they came to be known as Napoleons. They were employed extensively during the civil war."

Singers' Salaries.

When Catalani first came to London in 1806, she bargained for £2,000 for a season of ten months at the King's Theater in the Haymarket, together with £100 to defray the expenses of her journey to London, and also one benefit, night free of expense. But Catalani ended in receiving much more than that. The total amount got by her from the theater in 1807, including benefits, was £5,000, and her net profits that year, with concerts, were £16,700. Alboni had £2,000 for one season, and when Sontag reappeared in London in 1849 she had £1,000 a month for six months. On June 21, 1833, Mme. Malibran wrote to her manager:

"Dear Mr. Bunn: Pressed for time as I am, having but a few days to remain in London, I would willingly accept your offer to play the 'Sonnambula' in English for one night, but on the terms of £250, payable on the morning of the representation. Yes or no, at once, if you please.—M. F. Malibran."—The Cornhill Magazine.

ARMOR ON A RAT DOG.

Protected by Leather From Rodent Bites—His Record as a Killer.

They've had a great time in clearing the old Boston mine, near Wilkesbarre, of rats, says the New York Herald. After all other experiments had failed, Frank Sheridan tried one. Sheridan has a bull dog, Tige, and he resolved to match him against the old Boston rats. Tige was taken down the slope a few days before Christmas and installed in the mule stable. The first day he was somewhat at a loss, owing to the novelty of the surroundings and the darkness, but two dead rats were scored to his credit. The next day, when he became more familiar, nine rats got the worst of it. Denny Dooris, one of the nippers, offered to bet $5 on the second day that Tige would not kill one hundred rats a week. Sheridan took the bet, and the next day Tige killed twenty-two. His record increased rapidly, and on the seventh day he had killed in all 210. The next week the number was doubled, and Denny Dooris, after paying $10, declared the bet off. But Tige did not come off free in all his conflicts. He received several severe bites and was once laid up for two days by his wounds. His master, however, came to his rescue by making a suit of leather armor, to which is fastened strips of tin, and thus protected from the back of his head to his tail. Tige is invulnerable. Tige has killed more than 3,000 rats, and not only his master, but all the men in the mine are proud of him. Sheridan is able to keep the count, because Foreman Evans has appointed three boys, whom he calls "rat boys," to go through the workings each day, find the dead rats and carry them out of the mine. Tige receives two pounds of beef a day, and what may appear strange, a big drink of whisky. He does not take this straight, but it is given to him in twice its quantity of water. His master says the whisky is an antidote for the poison of the rat bites. While the mine is not yet clear of rats, yet Tige has killed so many and made himself such a terror that the pests are gradually retreating to the more deserted corners, and the dog has now to hunt for game.

Novelty in Swindling.

A young gentleman applied the other day to a clergyman after church for half a sovereign that he had dropped into the collection plate by mistake for sixpence. He could not afford to give half a sovereign, he said, and should be glad to have his nine-and-sixpence back again. Curiously enough, when one considers how prone is the natural man to be generous at other people's expense, the clergyman declined to accede to his request. He examined the contents of the collecting plate and found only a few gold pieces, the donors of which were all identified. The device in question therefore appears to be a novelty in the art of swindling, and must be added to the long list of "plants."—London Illustrated News.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

WORK OF THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings in the Senate and House, Comprising a Brief Summary of the Week's Business.

St. Paul, March 8.—So many senators were absent with the three committees visiting state institutions that it became necessary to dodge the question of a quorum present. This was done by not calling the roll nor attempting to pass any measure. As soon as possible the senate went into committee of the whole, thus preventing any point of no quorum, and when general orders were finished it adjourned until morning.

The much discussed question of the constitutionality of appropriating for drainage purposes is argued at in a letter from Attorney General Childs, which was read and ordered printed in the journal. It is likely to be unpalatable to the advocates of extensive state drainage for the wet lands in the northwestern part of the state. A large number of pending bills will be affected by the legal opinion. The attorney general of the state decides that all appropriations for drainage and for roads and bridges are unconstitutional. He holds to his former opinion that appropriations for roads and bridges, in the absence of grants of land or property therefor, are unconstitutional, and also holds that the state must receive some consideration in return for the appropriation. The friends of the bill will endeavor to show that the state received the consideration in advance when the lands were given it by the government, and that it will receive further consideration in the redemption of the lands by which they are made tillable and yield the state a revenue by taxation.

An unusual petition on Sunday legislation was presented by Senator Allen, who announced that he was not in sympathy with its contents. Senator Ozmun introduced a bill for an interstate conference to discuss securing uniform laws on a number of subjects. Senator Theden started a vigorous agitation by introducing a bill to repeal the anti-scalpers' law.

The session of the house lasted only an hour. Many of the members had gone to Fergus Falls to inspect the insane hospital, and two of the house committees were at Stillwater with Gov. Clough and the prison officials. The result was that there were scarcely enough members to transact business, and, when the calendar was reached the house adjourned.

St. Paul, March 9.—The capitol bill as amended in the house passed the senate by the decisive vote of 41 to 12. No amendments were made, so it only needs the governor's signature to become a law. The principal feature connected with the debate was an attempt to secure a week's postponement in order to consider an offer of Loring Park, Minneapolis, as a site for the new building. Two amendments were offered and voted down; one was that the selected architect should give a bond of $1,000,000 that his structure could be completed for $1,750,000, and the other to limit the architect's fee to 2 1-2 per cent of the cost of the structure.

Senator W. E. Johnson presided over the committee of the whole at its morning session

Another fight upon the matter of appropriating money for cyclone sufferers was precipitated when S. F. No. 265, appropriating $8,000 for Meeker county, was reached. Senator Roverud moved its indefinite postponement. The senator said this was no occasion for charity. He opposed the bill because it was not the province of the legislature to insure citizens against loss by cyclones. Senator Hanson and Senator Stevens spoke strongly in favor of the bill. Mr. Stevens was particularly effective in his argument. An effort was made by Senator Miller to extend the operation of the law to all sufferers by cyclones in the state. He ommended for passage.

Senator Smith introduced the bill on railroad rates on grain and lumber which had been agreed upon at the conference of delegates from North Dakota and Minnesota. It provides that the rates must not exceed 90 per cent of those in force on Jan. 1, 1895. Any neglect or refusal of the companies to comply with the above is to be punished by a fine of not less than $50 a day.

In the House.

The house did considerable work and subsequently set some of it aside. The bill providing for a revision of the statutes and making an appropriation of $35,000 therefor was passed; also Mr. Feig's bill establishing the office of state entomologist and providing $5,000 for the maintenance of the department of the state government.

Mr. Jacobson's county option bill was defeated in committee of the whole, but the statesman from Lac qui Parle would not allow it to remain in its temporary grave and succeeded in having it excepted from the committee's report and laid on the table. The omnibus game and fish bill was discussed at some length; or rather the former executive agent of the commission and his expense accounts were the matters principally under discussion. That his methods were not popular with many of the members there was no question. The bill was finally referred to the judiciary committee to be amended and returned to its place on general orders.

Of the nine bills introduced the most important are Dr. Zier's truancy bill and Mr. Anderson's providing for the establishment of an interstate park embracing the Dalles of the St. Croix.

A protest was received from a number of citizens of Ershine against the impeachment of Judge Ives and declaring the proceedings to be persecution. The protest was referred to the judiciary committee.

St. Paul, March 10—The general appropriation bills as prepared by State Auditor Dunn, was introduced in the house by Mr. Robbins. The appropriations cover the current expenses, not already provided for by the statute, for the state government and the several state institutions. The total amount asked for is $1,158,095, and of this sum $567,075 is for the fiscal year ending July 31, 1896, and $591,920 for the year ending July 31, 1897.

In the house the Duluth normal school bill was recommended to pass. The beet sugar bounty bill and the one appropriating $2,000 per annum for the publication of the reports of the horticultural society were also placed upon the calendar. Among the twenty-eight bills introduced were the general appropriation bill for the current expenses of the state government and state institutions, two constitutional amendments relating to exempting property for taxation and a bill providing for the inspection of hay, potatoes and other farm products at terminal points by the grain inspection department of the state. Another important bill was that of Mr. Gibbs providing for civil service in the grain inspection and weighing departments of the state.

In the Senate.

Shortly after the senate had reassembled and during a momentary lull in the proceedings President Day announced that he had received information that the Hayward jury had brought in a verdict of guilty. There was a general burst of applause and for five minutes confusion and conversation ruled supreme. A feature of the morning session was the expected adverse report of the judiciary committee on H. F. 1, the proposition to tax unoccupied railroad lands. The bill to authorize the sale of the site purchased in Duluth for the state elevator was lost by a vote of 3 to 35 when it came up on the calendar.

Bills Passed—Jones—To amend section 20, chapter 36, General Statutes 1878, relating to school meetings in common school districts.

Stevens—to amend chapter 250, General Laws 1889, relating to the salary of the clerk in the state treasurer's office and raising it from $1,200 to $1,500.

Spencer—To vest in district courts all trusts relating to townships heretofore vested in any judge of said courts; relates only to Duluth.

Morgan—Regulating the naming of banking and trust companies; to prevent confusion by similarity of names.

Foss—To prevent the spread of noxious weeds from empty freight cars by keeping the doors closed while being transferred from station to station.

Gutterson — To amend chapter 13, General Statutes 1878, relating to public highways in townships and authorizing the inhabitants to place the roads and bridges under the management of board of supervisors.

Senator Miller introduced a bill, S. F. 519, appropriating $100,000 for a monument on the grounds of the new state capitol in commemoration of the services and sacrifices of the soldiers of Minnesota in the civil and Indian wars. The board of capitol commissioners are to select the monument after a competitive contest.

St. Paul, March 12.—The senate did a full day's work, holding long morning and afternoon sessions. It managed to dispose of a large number of bills pending on general orders. Among them it recommended for passage Senator Keller's two bills relating to adulterated spices and baking powders. Also the house bill providing for a rebate of $2 road tax for every broad-tired wagon used by farmers. An incident of the morning session was the debate over the anti-Sunday theater bill of Senator Theden. The committee to which it had been referred reported adversely upon it, and the debate was over the proposition to get it on general orders, when it can be discussed on the floor of the senate. As a matter of senatorial courtesy this was secured.

Senator Hodge secured the passage of a resolution asking Attorney General Childs to give his opinion upon the legal effect of the passage of H. F. 1, the bill to tax unoccupied railroad lands. Among the nineteen bills introduced several were of some general interest. Senator Thorpe presented a bill placing around graduates of inebriate institutions the same legal protection now given habitual drunkards and students. His idea is that when one has shown a desire to cure the liquor habit the law should prevent temptation being placed in his way. Senator Keller introduced a bill which is a copy of the California law relating to taxation of mortgaged property. It provides that when mortgaged property is assessed for taxation the face of the mortgage shall be subtracted from the value of the property and the owner's assessment thereby reduced.

SHE'S FROM ST. CLOUD.

A Girl Who, Dressed in Male Attire, Served on a Man-of-War.

Seattle, March 12. — A remarkable story is published here of a girl who served on the United States coast defense vessel Monterey for seven weeks disguised as a boy. According to the girl's story she was born in St. Cloud, Minn., fifteen years ago, and was named Mary Townsend. Last May the girl married a brick mason named Love, but she pined for the sea, and, donning boy's attire, enlisted as a plumber's apprentice on the Monterey. According to her story three of the officers knew her sex; also the plumber. She says she sailed to Portland and then to San Francisco on the Monterey. The plumber finally put her ashore because he thought her secret would be discovered. The girl also claims to have been on the Mohican and the Independence, but this is not believed.

SMITH RESIGNS,

And Thomas D. O'Brien Is Appointed in His Place.

St. Paul, March 12.—T. D. O'Brien has been appointed by Judge Clough as a member of the board of trustees of the hospitals for the insane to succeed Mayor Smith, who tendered his resignation. Mayor Smith was appointed to the board by Gov. Nelson during his first term, and was reappointed by him in January last. Mayor Smith was seen and stated that his reason for resigning from the board was simply that he could not attend to his duties as a member of the board satisfactorily on account of the pressure of other business. It was through his influence that Mr. O'Brien was honored.

Died of Hydrophobia.

Reading, Pa., March 12.—Mrs. Susan Dautrich, aged sixty years, who was bitten in the hand by a strange dog which she took out of the cold six weeks ago, died here to-day. She showed all the symptoms of hydrophobia, snarling and barking, dread of water and all the horrible sufferings of a person afflicted with rabies.

HARRY MUST HANG

HE IS CONVICTED OF MURDERING CATHERINE GING.

"Guilty as Charged" Is the Verdict Rendered by the Jury in the Famous Murder Case After Deliberating Two Hours.

Minneapolis, March 10.—"Guilty as charged" was the verdict rendered by the jury in the case of Harry Hayward for the murder of Catherine Ging, and he is now in the shadow of the gallows.

The verdict was reached after only two hours' deliberation.

Mr. Erwin was taken ill before the verdict was announced and went to St. Paul. A stay of proceedings was granted until next week, when a motion will be made for a new trial. If this is refused an appeal will be taken to the supreme court.

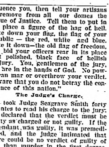
Had the verdict been one of acquittal Hayward would have been lynched and nothing could have prevented it, as the mob about the court room was large enough to overcome the entire police department.

The Day's Proceedings.

Court opened an hour earlier than usual to give Mr. Erwin the time to close his argument for the defendant, which had already lasted two days. Erwin began by pointing out that the loan Harry Hayward made Miss Ging had not been attacked in the evidence except by the word of Claus Blixt. The validity of this loan was the citadel of the defense. It was evident that had the police machine been properly set in motion the mystery surrounding Miss Ging's behavior would have been solved, and in a manner consistent with the noble character of the girl. At the same time it would have relieved this "innocent man from the charge under which he now rests."

Mr. Erwin then devoted himself to the alibi and claimed that all of Harry's time when he was involved by Blixt's testimony had been satisfactorily accounted for. In closing he said this is the most monstrous persecution in the country's history.

"If you are in obedience to the pressure brought on you to tear down all the rules of law, if fanaticism and the monstrosity of this alliance between the perjurer and the murderer are to influence you, then tell your artisans to remove from all our domes the statue of Justice. Tell them to put in her place a figure of the hag of hell. Take down your flag, the flag of your republic — the red, white and blue. Take it down—the old flag of freedom, and bid your officers rear in its place that polished, black face of hellish perjury. You, gentlemen of the jury, you are in the hands of God. No power can mar or overthrow your verdict. Beware that you do not betray the conscience of this nation."



Harry Hayward.

The Judge's Charge.

It took Judge Seagrave Smith forty minutes to read his charge to the jury. He declared that the verdict must be guilty as charged or not guilty. If the defendant was guilty, it was premeditated, and the judge intimated that there could be no verdict of guilty of less than murder in the first degree. He then explained the reasonable doubt theory at great length. He continued:

"To what extent the defense has discredited Blixt's testimony is for you, gentlemen, to say. They say his testimony was conflicting, and you have a right to take into consideration the condition of Blixt's mind that night. It is necessary for you to be satisfied that Blixt killed Miss Ging. Second, that Hayward incited. If, when you retire, you are satisfied that Blixt killed the girl, you may proceed; if not, do not consider the verdict further. But if Harry did incite, as charged, your verdict will be guilty.

"The state is not relying on circumstantial evidence, but has the positive testimony of Blixt that he killed Miss Ging, and the positive statement of Adry Hayward, a few days before the murder, that Harry said he was going to kill her. This testimony is also supplemented by much circumstantial evidence. You must decide how far this evidence is worthy of credence and how far it is corroborative. The testimony of an accomplice must be accepted with extreme care. In judging of the credibility of these witnesses the jury was entitled to consider their attitude on the stand, the reasonableness of their statements and the conditions under which they testified. If it was believed that any witness had testified falsely it was at liberty to discard his evidence, except wherein corroboration from other reliable source established its credibility."

If it was apparent that any witness was possessed of ill-feeling against the accused, that also might be taken into consideration. If the jury found that any witness had given testimony on a promise of immunity from punishment, that also must be carefully weighed. This case was to be tried on the same principles precisely as any criminal case, no matter how slight its importance. The jury had nothing to do with the punishment inflicted. No attention was to be paid to the utterances of attorneys on either side, except as based on the testimony, but when the evidence was placed in the jury's hands it was the duty of the jury to decide, after weighing it carefully, whether it was sufficient to sustain the charge against the defendant.

Guilty as Charged.

The charge was perfectly satisfactory to both sides and no exceptions were noted. It was generally conceded to be fair and impartial.

The ruling passion in Harry Hayward was strong in the presence of death. He placed a bet of $10 this morning that the verdict would be an acquittal and that it would be reached inside of two hours by the jury.

Judge Smith stayed in the court room until noon, and then, as no word came from the jury room, went home to dinner. The court was adjourned.

At 2 o'clock the jury reported that they had agreed upon a verdict and the judge was sent for. He ordered that Hayward be brought in. When the prisoner arrived he was the coolest man in the court room. He sat there amid the solemn silence of the big room, scanning the faces of his twelve countrymen, one by one, as if to learn in advance whether any ray of hope lurked behind their impassiveness. The jurymen looked stern and sad. The story they had to tell could be read in their faces and Hayward knew his fate before a word was spoken. No spectators were admitted. The only persons present when the verdict was handed in were police officers, sheriff's deputies and reporters, besides the judge and clerks. Outside a howling anxious mob awaited the news, and awaited it with ghoulish impatience.

When Judge Smith arrived he issued strict orders to admit no one, and the injunction was religiously observed. Kobler, the deputy clerk, asked in a tremulous voice whether the jury had agreed upon a verdict, and Neil McNeil, the foreman, stood up. His face was ghastly in its color, and there was not a man on the jury unaffected by the intense gravity of the situation. Timberlake's dark eyes shone like sloes from his ashen visage, and even the farmer members were visibly horrified with the stern duty devolving upon them.

"We have agreed," said McNeil in a voice that was scarcely audible, and the folded piece of paper that meant life or death to the accused was handed to the clerk. Judge Smith looked over the document first and returned it to Deputy Clerk Kobler.

Didn't Phase Him.

"We, the jury, find the prisoner guilty," he read. Every eye was turned toward the condemned man. There was nothing in his face to indicate that he had heard a word of it. He threw his head back as the word "guilty" was pronounced, but it was only to adjust his collar band. He did not change color by a single shade. Twice he coughed—that strange, hard, metallic cough that has been heard so often in the last few weeks. Then, looking around at the crowd he raised his eyebrows inquiringly as though to ask: "What next?"

During the polling of the jury he listened with evident interest to the answers, though what they might be could signify nothing to him. The expression in his face was one of indignation rather than any other sentiment. Judge Smith then voted his thanks to the jury for their labors in connection with the case. At the request of the defense a stay was granted until next week.

At 2:45 Hayward was taken down stairs and led back to jail under a strong police guard.

In the belief that trouble might occur if the verdict exonerated Hayward, a force of determined officers had been detailed to duty in the court room and vicinity. An immense crowd awaited the prisoner's coming. He grinned at the mob as it pushed forward over the pavement toward him, and it is doubtful whether Harry Hayward would have regretted an opportunity to mix matters with some of the noisiest. He was taken across the street on a dog trot, with the yelling multitude at his heels.

"Not Yet," Says Harry.

"Good by, Harry, old boy," cried one man at the top of his voice. "You're a dead duck."

"Not yet," said Harry loud enough to be heard in a radius of twenty feet. "Not quite a dead duck yet."

According to the statutes of the state only one fate can await Harry Hayward—a sentence to be hanged by the neck until dead, and that sentence to be pronounced by the lips of the judge before whom he was tried. Neither the jury nor the judge could alter the sentence no matter how strongly inclined they might be toward leniency. For murder in the first degree the law provides only one penalty. Judge and jury alike are but the agents of the state for the execution of that law, and the verdict of the jury has made the sentence of Harry Hayward as certain as though the judge had already announced it.

PERJURY CHARGED.

Two Witnesses in the Hayward Trial Arrested.

Minneapolis, March 10. — Following close upon the heels of the verdict in the Hayward trial another sensation was sprung when warrants were sworn out against two of the witnesses for the defense, charging them with perjury. The warrants were sworn out by Attorney R. R. Odell against Maggie Wachtler, formerly his stenographer, and George A. Grindall. The former is charged with perjuring herself in that part of the testimony in which she swore that Blixt in his statement to Odell before the trial began to relate a story in which he charged Adry Hayward with conspiring with him to murder Catherine Ging that he was interrupted by Odell and told not to mention the name of Adry Hayward and that he retorted that he thought he was expected to tell the truth. The warrant is a lengthy one and reproduces, from the court records of the Hayward case, those words uttered by Miss Wachtler on the stand which are alleged in the warrant to have been perjury on her part.

The warrant against Grindall also reproduces his testimony in which he swore that he saw Catherine Ging stop her buggy at a corner near the West hotel, just after leaving the hotel on the night of the murder, and hold a conversation with a man described as wearing a full gray beard and moustache and pointed tan shoes. This testimony was introduced by the defense in an attempt to show the connection of some supposed third man with the murder, and was refuted on the stand by witnesses for the state who showed that Grindall was in another part of the city at the time that he swore to having been near the West hotel.

Both of the accused witnesses were arrested and Miss Wachtler was later liberated on her own recognizance upon order of Judge Holt, of the municipal court.

MINERS ENTOMBED.

Possibly a Fatal Fire in a New Mexico Mine.

White Oak, N. M., March 12.—At 3 o'clock this morning a fire broke out in the change room of the hoist house of the Old Abe mine, and in a few minutes the structure, a large and well built one, was a mass of flames. It was completely destroyed, together with the wood and smith shops. The mill, sixty feet away, escaped without damage. The wood work of the shaft was burned out and the hoisting machinery destroyed. The damage runs high up into the thousands, but the most distressing feature is that some men are imprisoned in the dark depths whose fate is unknown. There is little ground for hope that they have escaped suffocation. It will not be possible to enter the mine to search for them until some time to-morrow. Rescuing parties have been unable as yet to get down further than the third level by the air shaft. The smoke and gases from the charred wood of the hoist shaft has penetrated the upper levels, and it is impossible to pass them. The entombed men are Charles Sherrick, E. J. Williams, Frank Wilson, John Davis, G. Baxter, Richard Scales, — White, Jerry Conver, J. P. Mitchell. Wilson, Davis and Baxter are married. White is a new man and was on his first shift. Williams and Sherrick are old in mining experiences and have fared like dangers before. They are cool headed, and if any place of safety is to be found, they found it. The fire broke out while G. E. Wilkinson was going down in the bucket to work. He had reached the ninth level when the hoist was abandoned and was shot down two hundred feet to the thirteenth level where the bucket struck, tipped and threw him into the drift. He was stunned but recovered and climbed back to the second level and escaped by the air shaft. Coke Keith, Mike Gallagher and Anton Sowgate escaped through the airshaft. This is the only serious mining accident since the burning of the South Homestake shaft several years ago when two men were smothered.

Rev, Irl Hicks the St. Louis Prophet says of the month of March, It will grow warmer about the 4th and storm centers of great and growing energy will appear. Heavy rain followed by snow ending in sweeping gales and blizzards will be on deck on the 15th. the next storm period is central about the 17th and the reactory storm movements will be apparent to the trained observer but many irregular disturbances will confuse the amateur and make this part of the month uncertain and disagreeable. The weather will warm up at the close of the month, but it is well to look out for rain storms, violent winds with a sequel of snow and March cold wave as the month goes out.

The impeachment proceedings against Judge Ives of this district are causing considerable excitment and as might be expected public opinion strongly favors the Judge. The following clippings from newspapers in various parts of the state show the general feeling in regard to the matter,

Charges have been made before the legislature against Judge Ives, of the 14th district and his impeachment is asked for The truth of the matter appears to be that Judge Ives made an honest effort to enforce the laws of the state against gambling and prostitution as well as to enforce the law regulating saloons, which have been driven over the state line into East Grand Forks, Minn., by the enforcement of the prohibitory law in North Dakota. An honest effort to enforce the laws in that part of the state appears to have been so surprising that these charges have grown out of it,—Northfield Independent.

Judge Ives of Crookston made things hot for dives and houses of ill fame and their keepers. are asking a Republican legislature to impeach him, presuming that it will be done because the brave and fearless Judge is a Populist. The legislature can do itself credit by extending Judge Ives a vote of thanks, —Hutchison Leader.

If the legislature votes down the trumpery charges against Judge Ives and uphold the hands of this Polk County Parkhurst, every legislator so voting not only votes protection for his own sons and daughters but to the youth of northern Minnesota as well.

FIVE FINGERED JAPAN ORANGES.

They Bear a Remarkably Close Resemblance to the Human Hand.

The five fingered orange is a queer thing. It grows exactly in the shape of a human hand, with a thumb and four fingers. It is a half open hand, that of this curious fruit, and the close resemblance to a lean, long nailed Chinese hand is startling. Even the nails are identical, hard pointed and clawlike, tipping the orange fingers with a length equal in some cases to three inches. It is no interloper in a well regulated family of oranges, but a regular member, belonging to the osage variety. It has a family name and a Christian name of its own, but its pet name is "five fingered orange," and nobody but the botanist cares to call it by the long one which means the same thing.

F. Gonzales, who lives out on Wayne street, found the odd plant a year or two ago over in Japan. He thought he had discovered a sort of missing link, so he brought it home to put into the conservatory among his choicest plants, where he guards it as the apple of his eye. Not a scale bug or other ravaging insect has a chance to live on its leaves, for he had a special bathtub built for its use, with a sheet iron chimney in the center, in which he places it periodically, puts a cover over the whole thing and gives it a Turkish bath treatment of sulphur and other fumes such as would make even the sturdiest scale bug turn up its toes. It is a hardy shrub, the outdoor climate of San Francisco agreeing with its health excellently well, although its owner is so choice of it that he doesn't give it a chance to sleep out very often. In its native country it is usually kept potted, and the Japanese seem to be fully alive to its value as an ornamental curiosity, for Mr. Gonzales found it a difficult matter to get one to bring to America, and so far nobody else ever did get one.

The orange tree is a ragged little shrub that does not average more than four or six feet in height. It does not grow straight, as a properly behaved tree is supposed to do, but is curled everywhere. It would be very difficult to find two consecutive inches in the entire tree whose line of direction is the same. Even the branches grow in spiral forms, so that the width of the tree is often as great as its height. There is a generous supply of thorns hidden under the leaves, and they are thorns that mean business. They are slender, tough and long and are located in all sorts of unexpected places. The leaves are fleshy, long and narrow and of a dark green color. They resemble a lemon leaf more than an orange leaf. Indeed in both this instance and in the color of the ripened fruit this singular plant seems to claim a very close cousinship to the large lemon family. The flowers come out in June and July and are very similar in appearance and odor to the ordinary orange blossoms, save that instead of the familiar creamy white color they have a delicate pinkish tint which is very beautiful. They commonly grow in clusters of two or three blossoms on alternate sides of the branch.

The fruit itself is of a light yellow [illegible] a pure lemon hue, growing greenish toward the stem. The size is immense, considered relatively to other oranges or to the size of the tree, the largest ones measuring when mature fully ten inches from the wrist to the point of the middle finger, including the nail. It is always necessary to furnish a support in the way of props and strings to sustain the growing fruit, or the limb will be broken by the weight. The fingers of the orange divide at about half the distance from the wrist, and though the division lines can be plainly seen throughout the entire length of the hand they do not destroy its contour. The proportional length of the fingers from the thumb to the little finger is perfect, corresponding exactly with that of a human hand. The fruit is not edible—none of the osage variety is—but what it lacks in being unable to tickle the palate it more than makes good in perfume. The strangest thing connected with the perfume is that it is the fruit and not the flower that is most odorous. The plant when ripe is so redolent that its scent can be recognized a full mile from where the orange is growing.—San Francisco Chronicle.

Backing the Authority.

"I was sorry, Willie," said his Sunday school teacher, "to see you keep your seat when the superintendent asked all those who wanted to go to heaven to rise. Don't you want to go to heaven?"

"Yes'm."

"Then why didn't you rise?"

"Cos he didn't have no right to tell me to rise, ma'am," answered Willie. "He ain't no Angel Gabriel."—Chicago Tribune.

A SPEAKING FIGURE.

The Daring Young Woman Posed Well and Won Her Wager.

A young woman in a box at the Auditorium attracted the attention of a group of men. One said something about her fan, which was an exquisite thing in feathers and lace.

"She won it on a bet. I am the victim," explained another of the group.

"I'll tell you how it was. She bantered me to take her to one of the museums where there are wax figures, and I took her up. As we wandered about the place admiring some of the natural poses she said she believed she could fool some one by passing as a figure. We talked about the proposition frivolously until it took a serious turn, and I made her a wager of a fan that she couldn't.

"She sat down at the first landing of the stairway and assumed a sort of pose such as a young woman assumes when she goes to a photographer's. The first person she fooled was one of the attendants of the place, who slapped her face with a feather duster. I think she would have backed out of her bet then if I had not gloried in the situation from the eyrie where I stood. The attendant, as I learned afterward, was a new hand, and it was his first round at the figures.

"Very soon an elderly man and woman wandered in with a catalogue. They did not miss a figure or a scene. When they reached the young woman in question, they examined the catalogue and then looked at the young woman. The figure had no number, no name. The old gentleman asked an attendant what it was, and the attendant replied that it was a new figure and hadn't yet been put on the list.

"A young man with a dreamy expression stood in front of the figure and said, 'If that was alive, I would fall in love with it,' and then passed on. I felt like kicking him, but I kept quiet. After awhile the old couple returned, and the man showed a disposition to linger and dally about the figure. The good old wife said to him, 'Samuel, if that was a real woman, I think I might get a little jealous of you even now.'

"The old gentleman replied: 'Well, mother, if it was alive, I think you'd be justified. It's the speakingest figure as it is I ever saw, and I've a mind to hunt up the manager of the show and see if he won't sell it.'

"'I reckon we had better be going,' the good old woman said as she tugged Samuel by the elbow.

"As they passed on the young lady concluded to speak. 'Say, dad,' she called out, 'come back. I'm alive.' She is a 'holy terror,' that girl is, even in her demurer moods.

"As soon as the old man heard the voice he looked back, and the young woman was beckoning him. The old man leaped in the air, and I heard him say: 'Mother, I've got 'em, sure as a gun. I tuk one of them new fangled drinks in the drug store and—come on, mother.' The last I saw of them the old man was clearing the way with an umbrella, his good old wife was in pursuit, and the people in that room were getting out of the way. The young woman concluded she had gone too far and came to me quickly for protection. As we passed out I asked one of the attendants what was the cause of the old man's flight, thinking we might be suspected.

"'It's nothing unusual,' he answered, 'for folks from the country to come in here and imagine that the wax figures are looking at them.'

"I paid the bet, but I'll never make another one like it."—Chicago Tribune.

Industrious.

In a very industrious German household described by Karl F. von Kloden in his autobiography idleness was looked upon as the root of all evil. Even the very small children must always be at work. Von Kloden's mother was a member of the family. He says:

From her earliest childhood my mother was kept hard at work all day, knitting or helping about the house or attending to her brothers. Blows and scoldings were not spared, and all excuses were silenced with the favorite injunction not to argue.

Once while the little girl happened to be sitting idle for a few minutes her grandmother called out to her:

"Why, child, you are doing nothing!"

"I have nothing to do," answered the child.

"Well," said the indignant grandmother, "when a little girl can find nothing else to do, she had better cut a hole in her apron and then mend it."

The child took the words seriously, and some time afterward was found mending a hole that she had cut in her apron. Nothing but her grandmother's confession saved the little girl from a whipping.

PURE BLOOD

Is absolutely necessary in order to have good health. The greatest affliction of the human race is impure blood.

There are about 2400 disorders incident to the human frame, the large majority arising from the impure or poisonous condition of the blood.

The best remedy for all blood diseases is found in Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Its remarkable cures are its loudest praise. It is not what we say but what Hood's Sarsaparilla does that tells the story.

No remedy has ever had so marked success or won such enormous sales.

Scrofula in its severest forms yields to its potent powers, blood poisoning and salt rheum and many other diseases are permanently cured by it. For a general Spring Medicine to remove those impurities which have accumulated during the winter, or to overcome That Tired Feeling, nothing equals

"I wish to say that three years ago we had a beautiful boy born to us. At the age of 11 months he breathed his last, a victim to impure blood. On Aug. 4, 1891, another boy was born, who at the age of two months became afflicted with the same disease. We believed the trouble was constitutional, and not common sore mouth. I procured a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla and commenced to give it regularly to both mother and baby. Improvement began at once. We have succeeded in eradicating the scrofulous blood from the system and to-day we are blessed with a nice, fat baby boy, 18 months old—the very all life and full of mischief—thanks to Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am a minister in the Methodist Protestant church, and it affords me much pleasure to recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla to all as a safe, sure remedy. Even my wife, after taking Hood's, became healthy and fleshy and has the bloom of girlhood again." Rev. J. M. Pate, Brookline Station, Missouri.

MINING DIAMONDS.

A System by Which the Smallest Gems Are Secured.

The diamond is one of the things that the public is never tired of hearing about, and is ever anxious to see, discuss, and, above all, to possess; but few have any idea of the tedious and laborious process by which the precious gem is mined and brought to the light of day. All the entrances to the mines are rightly guarded, and only the written permit of the manager will enable the visitor to descend the huge shaft which pierces the working level, say, 1,000 feet below. In the tunnels of the mine, which are about seven feet high, the miners are hard at work drilling holes in the adamant ground with a large crowbar, which they use with both hands. After making six holes each, which may take three hours, or six, or longer, according to the hardness of the stratum they are working in, they are allowed to retire to their homes in the compound, and rest for the remainder of the day. Dynamite cartridges are placed in the drilled holes and exploded, and the blue ground which has been dislodged is shoveled into trucks, each of which holds a ton, run along the level and taken up the shaft. It is carried in large lumps as hard as granite to "the floors," where it is spread out and left from three to six months to be pulverized by the action of the sun, air and rain, a steam harrow being run over it from time to time to assist the process of disintegration. In due time it is taken to the washing machine, the work of which is to sift out all the light deposit, called "tailings," in which no diamonds are found, and to clean the "ground," which is then placed in a hopper and carried by the revolving buckets to the top of an elevator, whence it is dropped into a cylindrical pan. As the pan is rotated water is thrown on its contents and the mass is chopped and sliced by iron knives; the light mud overflowing the center, and the heavy deposit containing the diamonds passing into a pulsating receiver, from which it is graded into three different sized sieves. Water is then pumped through the bottom, and the light deposit is forced over the top, the heavier substance falling through the sieves. It is then passed by means of valves into tubs, and the important work of searching for the diamond commences. Four times do the searchers examine every particle of the material, and so carefully and thoroughly is the work done that it is said that a half carat diamond might be mixed with a couple of hundredweight of earth in the hopper at the upper end of the sifting machine, with perfect assurance that it would ultimately come into the hands of the sorters.—Cincinnati Tribune.

Had Lost His Mind.

The doctor put up his watch.

"The crisis is past," he said, "and Col. Bourbon is spared yet for many years to old Kentucky. I have now but one fear. The dreadful fever he has had may leave him his health but rob him of his reason."

With a nod he stepped noiselessly from the room. The friends of the sick man sat silent, hardly knowing as yet whether they should rejoice. Suddenly the sufferer stirred. "Water! Water!" he gasped. The watchers started.

"His mind wanders," they said. Their worst fears were confirmed.

"Better death!" they murmured, and wept like women.

An Instantaneous Cure.

A Springfield (N. J.) farmer has for some months been bedridden from rheumatism. A few days ago, acting on the recommendation of a friend, the farmer's wife placed half a dozen tightly corked beer bottles filled with water in the stove to heat, as a remedy for the disease. Presently the six bottles exploded, wrecking the stove and shattering the windows. Nearly frightened to death, the bedridden farmer bounded to his feet and rushed from the house. When he returned all traces of the rheumatism had vanished and it has not since returned.

DUNNED IN CHURCH.

A Woman Who Presents Her Accounts During Service.

She was a very dainty looking old lady, respectably and neatly dressed, and she stepped into the witness box of the North London police court with the air of a woman laboring under a deep-seated grievance. She took off her black worsted gloves and lifted her veil, coughed a dry, hard snort, and said: "Your honor, I wish to put a stop to a great annoyance." "Who annoys you?" asked Mr. Lane, Q. C. "My landlady." "Why does she do it?" then demanded the magistrate. "Well—ahem—I owe her a little rent." "Yes; and what does she do?" "Ah!" cried the lady, "that's the serious point. She comes to my place of worship and asks for it there, and it's most annoying." "You mean to say," asked Mr. Lane, "that she goes to church and asks you for your rent?" "Yes, sir, I do assure you. She comes into the pew beside me, and when I join in the responses, as I always like to do, she continually whispers about the rent. When it comes to 'Incline our hearts,' you know the words, sir, she looks at me and sings, 'to pay the rent.' During the sermon, too, she is always nagging about it—and it's very little owing, I assure you; but it's annoying, sir, to be dunned like that, and in church, too. It's so undevotional, and interferes with the spirit one ought to have in church." "Oh, gracious me!" ejaculated the magistrate; "it's awful! And in your place of worship!" "Yes, your honor," continued the old lady, apparently gratified with the magistrate's sympathy, "and she actually comes there and asks me for my rent." "Well, I have no doubt it's very unpleasant," said Mr. Lane, "but there is nothing illegal in it. She has the right to ask for what is due her." "Oh, has she?" cried the applicant, "we shall see," and she took up her reticule and left the court, with a firm determination to do something beaming all over her face.—London Telegraph.

HORSES IN OLD AGE.

With Good Care They Retain Their Usefulness a Surprising Time.

It is a common opinion that a horse of twelve years is too old for service; but I have one at the present time that is thirty years old, and good for a ride of thirty miles a day yet. He is doing his usual work, and keeps his level beside a mule only six years old in the plow or the wagon.

I once bought a mule that was said to be forty-five years old, and the evidence was certainly trustworthy that he had been worked in one family thirty-five years, as I bought him from the grandson of the man who had him all that time. I think I am correct in saying that the noted trotting mare, Goldsmith Maid, went into the breeding stable only when twenty-six years old, and many of the best of the racers have lived over thirty years.

There is a record of a shire horse in England that reached the age of fifty-nine years, at which his teeth and eyes were still good, and he was then pensioned off by the owner on a farm. My forty-five-year-old mule did good service drawing empty railroad cars into a mine which I was then working, to be loaded with iron ore, and I kept him at it two years, when I gave him to the person who bought out my interest in the property.

He was still at the same work two years after that. My old horse is still able to shell his corn as well as my young mules can, and how much longer he will work I suppose depends on his ability to feed, which just at present seems to be assured for several years, as evidenced by his vigorous neigh when I go into the stable at feeding time. And occasionally he takes a colt-like frolic with his companions in the pasture.

Now, if it is possible for a horse, by means of good feeding and general care, to live and work to such an age as this, how much is the aggregate loss which occurs through neglect and mismanagement on all farms in the country?—Country Gentleman.

THE SPIDER MAKES MUSIC.

Singing of Two Kinds, But Inaudible to Human Ears.

It is not generally known that some spiders can make a noise; in fact, it is only recently that this has been established beyond dispute, though it was discovered half a century ago that some species possess stridulating organs like those of a cricket or a grasshopper. The present state of our knowledge concerning these organs, the method of their use, and their purpose is summarized by R. I. Pocock in Natural Science, London. Mr. Pocock says:

"In many spiders, owing to the small size of the organs and the shrillness of the note, the stridulation cannot be heard by human ears, and we can only infer from analogy that it is actually produced. In a spider of the Southern hemisphere, however, called Thomisoides, it is distinctly audible. The organs that produce it consist of a scraper formed by sharp tubercles on the palp, and a ridged area on the mandible. By drawing the former up and down over the latter a noise resembling the buzzing of a bee is produced. The palp, it should be explained, is a short limb formed almost exactly like the legs, but never used for walking.

"In another group, the huge Indian bird spiders, so-called because they are said to entrap and eat birds, sounding organs of a different kind are often found, consisting of a series of strings of keys and of strikers, which set them vibrating.

"The purpose of the sounds has been a much vexed question. The following recapitulation of the opinions of the best authorities is given by Mr. Pocock:

"Stridulating organs in spiders seem to exist for two distinct and definite purposes. In the case of Lephthyphantes and of the species referred originally to Theridium, the organs are better developed in the males than the females, or are exclusively confined to members of the former sex. From this fact, coupled with the circumstance that the spiders of these two kinds are, judging by analogy, possessed of auditory organs we may infer, although as yet without direct proof, that the male makes use of his sounding organs during the period of courtship. This, as is well known, is a time which to the male of every species is beset with exceptional difficulties and dangers, owing to the irascible and voracious disposition of the more powerful female, who will often rather make a meal of her suitor than a mate. Consequently, to soothe her temper and reduce her to a proper frame of mind, he is often driven to practice various charms and ingenious wiles. The males, for instance, of some species of the Attidae, or jumping spiders, execute fantastic dances and antics, as described by Mr. and Mrs. Peckham, and, like peacocks, make a display the while of whatever plumes or bright colors they possess. So that, since it seems to be established that the females of the Attidae have in all probability an esthetic sense which is gratified by the sight of gaudy ornaments on members of the opposite sex, there appears to be no great extravagance in the supposition that the females of the species of Theridium and Lephthyphantes, like the females of our song birds, not to mention nearer allies, may be charmed by the musical efforts of their lovers. But whether this be the object of the stridulation, or whether it be merely used as a sign of the specific identity of the approaching male, the evidence indicates that it only serves its possessor in his relations with the females of the same or of closely allied species.

"In the second case, namely, that of Thomisoides and the Aviculariidae, in which the stridulating organ is brought to the same state of perfection in the females as in the males, the spiders themselves being by analogy unable to hear, the available evidence shows that the sound has nothing directly to do with the relations of one sex to the other, but that it functions solely as a danger signal, warning enemies to keep their distance. While, however, the signal is genuine enough in the large and powerful Aviculariidae, in Thomisoides it is altogether fraudulent, since the spider, which is relatively a feeble animal, by aping the humming of a bee, succeeds in deluding its hearers into the belief that it possesses certain dangerous qualities to which in reality it has no claim."

Fast Telegraphing.

In September of last year a Manchester, England, packing company had occasion to telegraph to their manager at Victoria, B. C. The message was handed in at the office of the cable company in Mount street, Manchester; a trial of speed was attempted, and the answer came back in ninety seconds the total distance by the wires being 13,000 miles. Equally sensational was the dispatch and receipt of a message over the New York and London wires in five seconds, a feat performed in October last.

HUNTING FOR GOLD.

ADVENTUROUS CAREER OF A CALIFORNIA PIONEER.

How Mansfield Warren, Killed a Rival Editor in Stockton, Got Into Jail for Life and Was Pardoned—One Million in Gold Dust.

Josie Mansfield, whose gay career in Gotham a generation ago is well remembered, had a father whose career was also remarkable—a mixture of the heroic and tragic. Said a California '49er to a Philadelphia Times writer the other day in a reminiscent mood: "Mansfield Warren came from New Orleans to San Francisco in the early fifties. He came after gold, like the rest of us, but as he was a small, sickly, consumptive-looking fellow, he did not pan out well as a digger in the mines; so he went to editing a weekly newspaper at Stockton. No sooner had he started up than the other editor went for him—in his paper.

"In those days personal journalism was the thing, and in California the editors spoke right out, calling each other all kinds of names not used in society. Warren replied, but in a gentlemanly way. While this newspaper war was going on one of the merchants attacked Warren for some alleged slight, and Warren being small and physically weak got the worst of the one-sided fight. He was so badly used up that he stated, as soon as he got out of bed, that he would kill the next man who attacked him. Accordingly, he purchased a long bowie-knife. It so happened that the editor of the rival sheet again abused him, and before Warren's paper came out he was attacked on the streets by this opponent. He knocked Warren down, jumped on him and was beating him unmercifully; Warren succeeded in unsheathing his bowie-knife, when he stabbed the aggressor to the heart.

"On the trial it was proved that Warren had threatened to kill the next man he might fight; also that he had bought the bowie-knife immediately after making the threat. The defense argued that Warren did not have the rival editor in mind these times; and, furthermore, that he acted in self-defense, which was the truth. However, he was found guilty and sentenced to be hanged. The governor commuted the sentence to life imprisonment, and in a year or two Warren was pardoned.

"The family removed to San Francisco, and here Josie began to assist in the elevation of the stage.

"As soon as she became prosperous she left the family in their old age and poverty and flitted eastward, to become notorious as the cause of the murder of Jim Fiske.

"I lost track of Warren until 1869. I met him in New Orleans. He showed me the first issue of the True Jeffersonian, a red hot Democratic paper that he had just started at Carrollton, a suburb of New Orleans.

"I may mention an instance in his career which will show that he was not a coward. It was the custom of the miners to ship their gold dust by steamer from Sacramento to San Francisco. About $1,000,000 was made in one shipment, guarded by Warren and a half dozen assistants. About fifty embarked on the steamer, under the guise of cattlemen and ranchmen en route to 'Frisco on business. The treasure room was amidships on the lower deck. The steamers in those days carried a small cannon at the bow, which was discharged on landing so as to notify the settlers. It also frightened the savage Indians, who soon came to regard the floating houses with fear and superstition. Warren suspected a move on the part of the roughs, and fixed the gun on a pivot, so that it would command the stern of the boat and the approach to the treasure room. He heavily loaded the gun, and then threw in a handful of nails for scattering shot. The attack, he was informed, was to be made at sundown, just as the boat was rounding the Pirate's Cove, about thirty miles above San Francisco. Warren and his men assembled in the bow, and soon noticed a number of men forming on the stern of the boat and others joining them from the cabin above by coming down the back stairway. The cannon was immediately reversed and Warren and his men drew their revolvers. 'Go up stairs or I'll turn her loose and mow you down like wheat!' shouted Warren as he stood ready to let her go.

"The roughs, seeing that they were outflanked, recoiled in disorder, and some ran upstairs. Just at that moment the boat ran on a sand-bar, and was keeled over, nearly upsetting her. The roughs were panic stricken, doubtless thinking this was part of the program, and some of them jumped overboard. The cannon also went overboard. In a few hours, fortunately, another boat came along and hauled us off the bar, and we arrived safely at San Francisco with our $1,000,000 in gold dust. No; those who jumped overboard did not get back. We would not let anybody board us at that stage of the proceedings—especially as we knew who they were. They may have swam ashore, though," concluded the '49er, in a rather doubting tone as to the ultimate safety of the roughs.

He Was Weighty.

They hadn't been married very long and were out skating.

"John," she said in a tone of extreme solicitude, "whatever you do, be careful not to go near one of those air-holes."

"Oh, it wouldn't be very serious. I can swim under water."

"I don't believe you could now. You know you ate a lot of that bread the new girl made, and if you get into the water you'll sink to the bottom and stay there, sure."

For the Bicycle.

Since women have become so enthusiastic and determined in their efforts to ride a bicycle the problem of suitable dress is constantly under discussion. So much distinction and individuality is given to women by their clothes that directly they take up a new exercise or amusement the all-absorbing question of dress is sure to present itself, and, when the artistic side is complicated with the requirements of usefulness as applied to a bicycle, it is not so easy to solve. As yet the ideal costume has not appeared. It must combine the virtues and the charms of purely feminine attire with more severe lines of the so-called "rational dress," which is, however, much it may vary in different countries, an ambition in the direction of trousers and quite skirtless. A great variety of costumes have been designed, and diverse opinions expressed as to their merits, and among them is the zouave dress with loose trousers; a Norfolk jacket and long gaiters, which now prevails in Paris. Parisian women are inclined to be fantastic in cycling dress, for one of the most important attractions of the wheel is the possibility it offers for new original costumes, which may or may not play their charms to the best advantage, the majority wear the zouave costume. Another favorite dress has a skirt and a short reef jacket, which is worn either open or closed over a soft shirt. Well-fitted knickerbockers and long gaiters are worn with this, all made of the same dark brown cloth. Pipings of leather are a suitable and very durable addition to cycling costumes.

A Bank Failure.

AN INVESTIGATION DEMANDED.

A general banking business is done by the human system, because the blood deposits in its vaults whatever wealth we may gain from day to day. This wealth is laid up against "a rainy day" as a reserve fund—we're in a condition of healthy prosperity if we have laid away sufficient capital to draw upon in the hour of our greatest need. There is danger in getting thin, because it's a sign of letting down in health. To gain in blood is nearly always to gain in wholesome flesh. The odds are in favor of the germs of consumption, grip, or pneumonia if our liver be inactive and our blood impure, or if our flesh be reduced below a healthy standard. What is required is an increase in our germ-fighting strength. Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery enriches the blood and makes it wholesome, stops the waste of tissue and at the same time builds up the strength. A medicine which will rid the blood of its poisons, cleanse and invigorate the great organs of the body, vitalize the system, thrill the whole being with new energy and make permanent work of it, is surely a remedy of great value. But when we make a positive statement that 98 per cent. of all cases of consumption can, if taken in the early stages of the disease, be CURED with the "Discovery," it seems like a bold assertion. All Dr. Pierce asks is that you make a thorough investigation and satisfy yourself of the truth of his assertion. By sending to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, Buffalo, N. Y., you can get a free book with the names, addresses and photographs of a large number of those cured of throat, bronchial and lung diseases, as well as of skin and scrofulous affections by the "Golden Medical Discovery." They also publish a book of 160 pages, being a medical treatise on consumption, bronchitis, asthma, catarrh, which will be mailed on receipt of address and six cents in stamps.

Hears With His Mouth.

A boy whose mouth is wonderful, in that it does the double service of tasting and hearing, was in San Antonio recently. His name is John McHand, and his home is at Sabinal. He was born ten years ago. Both ears were closed at birth, and they have never been of service to him. But by a remarkable freak of nature his mouth has done what his ears ought to have done, and he is not incommoded in the slightest. Several local doctors examined and tested the powers of the mouth and pronounced the case a phenomenon without a parallel.

Train Saved by a Tramp.

Last Thursday night, while the wind was blowing almost a gale, the thermometer ranging down at the rate of 5 degrees an hour, and everything freezing, making it one of the worst nights on record here, a tramp performed a brave deed. After the shoofly had gone up, a large tree fell across the track of the Central about a mile above Eden, making a dangerous obstruction, which would have wrecked the first train passing. This obstruction was found by the tramp. He made all haste to reach Eden, the nearest station, hunted up the agent, and notified him of the accident. There is no telegraph office at Eden, and the agent knew he would not have time to notify the section foreman and the telegraph office at Meldrim both. The tramp again offered his services and carried the message to Meldrim, and the night passenger train went safely through, the passengers never knowing they had probably been saved the horrors of an awful accident by the prompt action of the tramp.—Meldrim (Ga.) STATE LEGISLATURE.

WORK OF THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings in the Senate and House, Comprising a Brief Summary of the Week's Business.

St. Paul, March 13.—The all-important matter discussed in the senate was the famous bill proposing to tax the unoccupied railroad lands granted by the state. It has passed the house for the third time and is now pending in the senate. It is expected to reach a vote to-morrow. The opponents of the bill are confident that it will be defeated, claiming to have pledged thirty-two votes against it, while its friends hope that the necessary twenty-eight votes can be secured. Senator Greer presided over the committee of the whole during the afternoon session when the famous H. F. No. 1 was being considered. It was read by the secretary, after which the debate began and continued until the senate adjourned.

House Proceedings.

In the house but little business of importance was transacted. Seven bills were recommended to pass and were placed on the calendar; the bill providing for a state embalming board was indefinitely postponed, and nine new bills were introduced and referred to committees.

Under the order of reports of committees the Ramsey delegation came to the front with two reports on H. F. No. 214—Warner—to pay sheriffs $500 as expenses for executing the death penalty for murder in the first degree. Mr. Warner presented the report favoring the passage of the bill, signed by five members of the delegation. Mr. Kelly handed in the minority report signed by the other five members of the delegation. That there is a difference of opinion between the several members of the delegation was made plain to the house. The bill was recommended to the delegation. The committee reported in favor of the indefinite postponement of H. F. No. 560, to repeal the law relating to the salary of the assistant county attorney, and the report was adopted.

St. Paul, March 14.—After a debate lasting two days the senate defeated the proposition to tax unoccupied railroad lands, known this session as the Anderson bill, H. F. No. 1. The vote was taken and the bill was lost, falling by one vote to secure a constitutional majority. Twenty-eight votes were necessary and only twenty-seven senators voted for the measure. Senator Barr, who is a strong advocate of the measure, changed his vote, in order to be able to move a reconsideration of the vote. This caused the official announcement of 26 votes for and 24 against the bill. The actual vote was 27 for and 23 against. The vote was:

For the bill—Allen, Barr, Cole, Culkin, Day, Hanna, Hanson, Heneman, Hodge, Iltis, Jones, Johnson, A. G.; Knatvold, Larson, Miller, Ozmun, Peterson, Reishus, Ringdahl, Sevatson, Sheehan, Theden, Thompson, Thorpe, Wing, Wyman, Young—27.

Against—Collester Currier, Dunham, French, Fuller, Greer, Howard, Morgan, W. E.; Keller, Masterman, Morgan, McArthur, McHale, Potter, Pottgieser, Roverud, Schaller, Spencer, Sperry, Stevens, Stockton, Sweingsen, Yale—23.

Bills Passed—Hanson, to appropriate $8,000 for the relief of sufferers from the effects of a cyclone in Meeker county June 27, 1894; Keller, to appropriate $5,000 for the relief of sufferers from the effect of a cyclone in Stearns county June 27, 1894; Greer, to protect the interests of stockholders in creamery corporations, and providing a penalty for the violation thereof; Keller, relating to the manufacture and of adulterated spices and condiments and requiring that the word adulterated be printed thereon; Keller, relating to the sale and manufacture of baking powder, to prevent fraud and to preserve the public health, requiring the constituents thereof to be printed on the label, and that alum and ammonia be stamped in the metal boxes if the powder contains the same.

In the House.

There were three sessions in the house and several important matters were disposed of. The occasion for the evening session was the acceptance by the house of the invitation to visit Duluth and the iron ranges on Friday and Saturday of this week. The Duluth normal school bill was passed after a hot debate by a vote of 78 to 17. In the committee of the whole, the Theden anti-Rand ordinance bill was recommended to pass by a vote of 43 to 23. The debate on this bill showed the temper of the house to be strongly in favor of enforcing the laws governing the sale of intoxicating liquors.

St. Paul, March 15.—The supposed dead measure to tax the unoccupied railroad lands, H. F. No. 1, Anderson, was reconsidered by the senate and passed. It gained the one vote necessary, and secured the constitutional majority of 28 votes. This ends a memorable legislative fight.

The final vote on the bill was:

For—Allen, Barr, Cole, Culkin, Day, Hanna, Hanson, Heneman, Hodge, Iltis, Jones, Johnson, A. G.; Knatvold, Larson, Miller, Ozmun, Peterson, Reishus, Ringdal, Sevatson, Sheehan, Smith, Theden, Thompson, Thorpe, Wing, Wyman, Young—28.

Against—Collister, Currier, Dunham, French, Fuller, Greer, Howard, Johnson, W. E.; Lloyd, Masterman, Morgan, McArthur, McHale, Potter, Pottgieser, Roverud, Schaller, Spencer, Stebbins, Stevens, Stockton, Sweningson—22.

Bills Passed.

S. F. 555—Pottgieser (substitute for S. F. 209)—To suppress the sale at retail of unwholesome plucked but undrawn poultry and small game, ducks, geese, rabbits, etc. The substitute excepts wholesale commission dealers and cold storage companies.

S. F. 25—Barr—To provide for establishing of section or property lines in townships at the expense of the property affected to re-establish obliterated and doubtful lines.

H. F. 151—Boxrud—To encourage the use of wide tire wagons, and to deduct $2 from the road tax of farmers for every wagon used having a tire broader than three inches, providing not more than one-half of the road tax shall be abated.

S. F. 390—Miller—To amend section 14, chapter 10, General Statutes 1878, relating to township organization, and changing the terms of township officials.

S. F. 340—Schaller — Changing the law relating to the commitment of inebriates to the special department in the rochester hospital.

S. F. 343—Morgan — To provide a penalty for coercing or influencing or making demands or requirements of employes, servant, laborers and persons seeking employment; amends the present "anti-ironclad" law by including other employes, etc.

S. F. 417—Stevens—To enable two or more colleges, seminaries of learning or educational institutions incorporated in the state to consolidate and become a single corporation.

H. F. 465—Bonbar—To authorize the normal school board to dispose of a useless frame building situated on the St. Cloud normal school grounds.

H. F. 178—Christensen—To amend section 310, chapter 66, General Statutes 1878, relating to exempt property; makes 100 bushels of wheat exempt, instead of fifty bushels.

H. F. 337—Ferris — To appropriate $15,000 to purchase grass seed for distribution among counties where meadow land had been destroyed by forest fires.

S. F. 502—Greer—To amend section 6, chapter 62, General Statutes 1878, relating to divorce; decreases time of desertion from three years to one year.

S. F. 460—Morgan—To amend section 5, chapter 77, General Laws 1879, relating to actions to determine the validity of condemnation proceedings.

S. F. 404—Morgan—To amend section 260, General Statutes of 1878, relating to the alienation and descent of cemetery lots.

S. F. 430—Stevens—To provide for evidence of service or attempted service of notice of foreclosure of mortgages on real estate by advertisement.

S. F. 242—Spencer — Providing the amount of fees to be charged by clerks of district courts in counties having a population exceeding 40,000 and less than 100,000; applies to St. Louis county only.

H. F. 49—Creating a medical corps for the national guard, amended so as to provide that the surgeons of this corps shall have certificates from the state board of medical examiners.

S. F. 525—Senator Potter's bill to authorize cities to inspect milk and dairies.

S. F. 470—Legalizing the transfer by a married woman of real estate under certain circumstances.

In the House.

The house took up the calendar and passed the following bills:

S. F. 120—Theden—Relating to intoxicating liquors.

H. F. 146—Cant—Relating to redemption from tax sales.

H. F. 350—Feig — Relating to the state horticultural society.

H. F. 45—Blagik—To encourage the manufacture of sugar.

H. F. 326—Cant—Relating to fees of clerks of district courts in certain cases.

The house judiciary committee took up the Ives impeachment matter and began the examination of witnesses. It was decided that the proceedings should be entirely executive and that no attorneys for either side should be admitted.

St. Paul, March 16.—The senate as a body was in a perturbed state of mind. Its members had not recovered their accustomed mental equilibrium, somewhat disturbed by the excitement attending the long session and bitter fight over H. F. No. 1. And there were many inquiries as to the whereabouts of the missing Cronkhite. Nobody knew where he was, although many ventured conjectures of where he might, could, would or should be.

Bills Passed.

The senators managed to shake themselves together sufficiently to go through the regular order of business before the adjournment at 4 o'clock to enable those who desired to take part in the contemplated legislative trip to Duluth, Tower and the iron mines. When bills on the calendar were reached two of the much-discussed bills of the session were taken up and passed. One was Ozmun's corrupt practices act, to prevent corrupt practices in elections, to limit the expenses of candidates, to prescribe the duties of candidates and political committees, and provide penalties and remedies for violation thereof. The other was Senator Jones' thistle bill. Some measure to aid the farmers of the western part of the state in rescuing the land from the clutches of the foreign invader has been urged by the agricultural counties. The need of immediate action was recognized in the neighboring states, and it resulted in holding a recent interstate conference on the subject in St. Paul. Senator Jones, who already had a similar bill before the senate, was president of the conference. The bill introduced later by him and passed was approved by the conference. Similar laws are to be secured in other states. Its provisions are familiar on account of frequent publication; they contemplate a simultaneous and vigorous assault wherever the weed has a foothold. The owners must destroy it on their lands; the counties along the roads, and the state on public lands. The bill carries an appropriation of $25,000.

Loring Park Is Offered.

The offer of Loring Park for the state capitol was made formally to the house and referred to the judiciary committee, after a long, and at times, rather heated debate, in which many matters were discussed. It came up early in the day, the "petitions, memorials and other communications," under which it was presented being read right after roll call. There was the usual amount of confusion and few seemed to be paying attention when the speaker handed a paper package to the reading clerk, with the remark: "Here is a communication from the city of Minneapolis, which the clerk will read." Confusion of talking and rustling of papers ceased, for all seemed curious to hear what the city of Minneapolis had to say to the legislature. The document was signed by Robert Pratt, as mayor of Minneapolis.

A HORRIBLE DEATH.

SUFFERED BY TWO WOMEN LIVING ALONE IN ST. PAUL.

An Attempt to Start a Fire With Kerosene Causes an Explosion in Which Mrs. Sumner and Miss Clossen Are Badly Burned.

St. Paul, March 19.—A most horrible accident occurred yesterday morning whereby Mrs. Frances Sumner and Miss Nellie Closson suffered awful deaths. They were roasted to death in a little fire in their residence. Miss Closson lived until 2:55 in the afternoon and Mrs. Sumner until 5:45.

Mrs. Frances Sumner, who was a divorced woman, lived at 833 Payne avenue. She was thirty-eight years old, and had for a companion her niece, Miss Nellie Closson, twenty-one years of age. They occupied rooms on the first floor of the house, the second and third stories being occupied by Conductor Wyman, his wife and little child.

Mrs. Sumner arose a little after 7 o'clock yesterday morning to light a fire in the stove, using kerosene. The fire leaped up with an explosion and set fire to the oil in the can which Mrs. Sumner had in her hand. It exploded and was hurled to the ceiling. In falling toward the floor it struck a lighted kerosene lamp, which was turned over and also exploded. The room was filled with fire and smoke and Mrs. Sumner's clothing caught fire immediately. Miss Closson was sleeping in the adjoining apartment, which was separated from the sitting room, where the accident occurred, by a pair of portiers.

Thinking the entire house was on fire Miss Closson hastily wrapped herself in a heavy quilt and toward a window. The room was a seething furnace, the air seemed to be on fire, and the shrieking women breathed the living flame. How Miss Closson retained life enough to stand tugging at the fastenings of the window while the burning gases in the room surged about her, burning off the covering and baking her living flesh, may not be told. She did, however, retain her senses, and finally got the window open and jumped out in the midst of a burst of fire which rushed through the vent afforded by the open window. The unfortunate woman was entirely nude except for some portions of her underclothing which had burned into her blackened flesh, and the keen air in her seared lungs maddened her. She ran screaming dreadfully up and down the walk, leaving bloody footprints to mark her movements, until she fell exhausted as the firemen arrived. She was picked up conscious and and carried into a near-by grocery store. The firemen made their way into the house and found a few patches of fire in the room in which the explosion occurred. It was but a moment's work to extinguish the fire, and the men made their way into the kitchen, a room adjoining that in which the fatality took place.

There Mrs. Sumner was found. She was crouched on her hands and knees in the attitude of prayer, with her clasped hands extended before her, her face and body burned and blackened in a shocking manner, and praying aloud, in a voice that awed the firemen, to be delivered from her awful suffering.

Dr. Heath arrived at about this time and examined Miss Closson first. It was at once apparent that there was no hope of saving her life, and morphine was administered to alleviate her pain, but she remained conscious and suffered to the last. Before dying Miss Closson told of the entire occurrence at the house. She said she formerly lived at Boscobel, Wis., where her father, B. D. Closson, still resides. She left his home to come to St. Paul and engage in the millinery business. She was a pretty brunette, and was engaged to be married to Conductor Alfred, of the Omaha road.

Mrs. Sumner's home was in Richland Center, Wis. Mrs. Sumner came to St. Paul a few years ago with her husband, from whom she obtained a divorce some time ago on the grounds of non-support.

Britannia Wins.

Monte Carlo, March 19.—The Monaco regatta opened to-day, and the principal event, the race for the prize offered by the prince of Monaco was won by the prince of Wales' Britannia, which gave the Ailsa her first defeat. The Britannia's victory, however, did not create the greatest enthusiasm among imperial yachtsmen, for the reason that it was gained in a poor trial of the qualities of the respective boats and was partly due to the Ailsa holding her opponent too cheaply.

Counterfeiters Caught.

St. Louis, March 19. — The police made an important capture in the persons of William B. Thomas and Wilson N. Morrison, who said they came here a few days ago from New Orleans. The arrest was made at 706 Pine street, where the men had hired a room, and where they were caught red-handed, making counterfeit money. A search of the room they occupied revealed a complete counterfeiting outfit for the making of dimes, quarters and halves.

Another Smallpox Case.

St. Paul, March 19.—Another case of smallpox has developed at 364 Rice street. The two-year-old child of Mrs. Liedgen, the woman who was first taken ill, showed signs of the disease yesterday, and was, last evening taken to the pest house.

Celebrated St. Patrick's Day.

Washington, March 19. — St. Patrick's day, coming on Sunday, was celebrated in St. Patrick's church with high pontifical mass by Mgr. Satolli and a sermon by Rev. Father Richards, president of Georgetown college, on the world-wide work wrought by St. Patrick and the Irish race. Mgr. Satolli was assisted in the service by Fathers Rooker Sbaretti and a large number of the local Catholic clergy. His celebration of the mass was accompanied by orchestra, choir and organ.

MAKES THE BEST OF IT.

Harry Hayward Seems to Be Enjoying Life in Hennepin Jail.

Minneapolis, March 17.—Harry Hayward is not the doleful person a man condemned to death is popularly supposed to be, at any rate his actions do not seem to indicate a mind afflicted with the enormity of the doom which is impending. He jokes and laughs with his keepers and friends, and nothing is too trivial to escape a jest or be made the subject of levity.

As an instance of this he happened to think the other day that Judge Smith, in passing the sentence upon him, said that he was not in favor of capital punishment and regretted the necessity of the law which compelled him to carry out that provision. Turning to the deputy who was with him at the time, he said jocosely: "The judge said that he hated to sentence me to hang. I wish you would tell him that he doesn't hate it nearly as much as I do."

ADVANCE IN WAGES.

Welcome News to the Workmen in the Connellsville Coke Regions.

Mount Pleasant, Pa., March 17.—Not since the halcyon days of the old syndicate has the Connellsville coker received such pleasant news as come to the almost 10,000 employes of the Frick and Southwest companies to-day, when notice was posted on all their works, stating that an advance in wages averaging 15 per cent will go into effect on April 1 next. The rate of mining per 100 bushels goes from 78c to 90c, drawing from 43c to 50c, and so on down through the different kinds of labor. The yard laborer is the only person who gets no advance, his pay remaining at $1.20 per day.

Making an Investigation.

Chicago, March 17.—A searching investigation into the affairs of the Illinois home for juvenile offenders was commenced to-day by the house committee on penal and charitable institutions. A number of officials were closely questioned, the famous "dark room" examined and then an adjournment was taken to the Harrison street station where eleven of the rebellious inmates of the home are locked up for taking part in the riotous proceedings of Sunday. The books of the institution will be examined and an effort will be made to discover what has become of the $64,000 said to have been expended in less than two years.

Vetoed by Gov. Sheldon.

Sioux Falls, S. D., March 17.—Gov. Sheldon has signed all the bills passed by the legislature except three, which he vetoed. These were the senate bill providing that a judge may suspend the sentence of an incorrigible youth when committed to the reform school and send him to the society to find homes for the friendless. The reason this was vetoed is that the bill repeals the wrong act. The senate bill dividing school districts was vetoed because of an error in drafting it. The railroad committee bill compelling interlocking systems to use switch towers was vetoed because it would entail unnecessary expense upon the companies.

Consumption Not Contagious.

Cincinnati, March 18.—(Special.)—The resolution to isolate consumptives at the pest house came before the hospital trustees yesterday. A protest from Dr. Amick was read. Two hospital doctors persisted that consumptives be sent to the small-pox pest house. Mayor Caldwell and another trustee opposed the removal. By unanimous consent the resolution was tabled indefinitely, never to be resurrected. Mayor Caldwell suggested use of Amick treatment at the hospital. Definite action was deferred. This victory won, Dr. Amick will battle for consumptives everywhere. He is mailing free, copies of his victory and the Amick consumption records, to physicians and consumptives who write him.

Costly Fire.

Devine, Tex., March 17.—An early morning blaze destroyed ten buildings comprising the business portion of this town. There was no water protection and the flames swept every house on the west side of the Internal and Great Northern tracks. Loss, $50,000.

Arrested for Embezzlement.

Ashland, Wis., March 17. — D. B. Butler, who was arrested a year and a half ago for embezzlement, and who has been in the custody of the sheriff under bonds of $500, was yesterday released and his bond canceled. He was released on the order of Judge Wilson.

Whisky Trust.

Chicago, March 17.— The much talked of reorganization of the whisky trust became a practically assured fact to-day when stock amounting to more than $17,500,000 was placed with the Manhattan trust company as a pledge toward reorganization.

Sentenced to Hang.

Morrilltown, Ark., March 17.— George Whittaker, convicted of murder, and Will Downs, convicted of rape, were sentenced to hang on Friday, April 26.

HER THROAT CUT.

A San Francisco Variety Actress Is Murdered.

San Francisco, March 19. — Charley Rice, a variety actor well known on the Pacific coast, was found on the street near his lodging house early this morning blowing a police whistle. He said that his wife was dead up stairs. Investigation revealed a horrible sight. The woman's throat had been cut with a razor from ear to ear, her head being all but severed from her body, and the bloody razor hidden under a pile of clothes. Rice said that he left the room for a short time, and on returning found his wife dead. Neighbors heard the pair quarreling upon their return from the concert hall where they are employed. As rows between them were of no uncommon occurrence, no one thought of interfering. The woman deserted her husband for Rice several years ago. She was known on the stage as Cora Everett.

Beware of the Board.

Chicago, March 19.—Frank M. McFarlin, a prominent member of the Chicago board of trade, was found in Washington Park by two park police officers this morning. Investigation showed that McFarlin had shot himself twice through the left breast. The circumstances surrounding his death indicate that it was deliberately planned. It showed that McFarlin had been brooding for several days over business embarrassments and in a letter addressed to the public he says he had tried and failed so often since he came on the board that he was at last disheartened and ready to give up, that he met defeat again Saturday, which was more than he could endure, and concluded by warning all honest men to beware of the board of trade.

MORITZ'S MURDERER.

It Is William Loeber, According to the Chief of Police.

Milwaukee, March 19.—"There is no longer a shadow of a doubt that William Loeber murdered Ferdinand Moritz for his money. We have woven a net of circumstantial evidence aroud Loeber that he cannot explain away. All that remains for him to do is to admit the crime." So said Chief of Police Janssen after he finished questioning Loeber with the view of securing his confession. "Robbery was the motive of the murder. Loeber believed that Moritz carried a large amount of money on his person, but in this he was mistaken. It is thought that Loeber only secured $15, and this has been recovered. Witnesses have also been found who saw Moritz go to Loeber's house on the morning he was last seen alive by his family, and who heard the two fatal shots fired that killed the old Hebrew. Loeber's horse and wagon were seen to emerge from the alley on Galena street with two men on it, presumably Loeber and Moritz, and later when the shots were fired, it was seen again by another witness. Blood-stained chips have been cut out of Loeber's wagon, and his clothes that he wore when arrested were also stained with human blood."

RECEIVER IN CHARGE.

Of the Waukesha Hygeia Mineral Water Company.

Chicago, March 19. — The Waukesha Hygeia Mineral Water company has gone into the hands of a receiver. Application was made for the appointment of the receiver before Judge Jenkins at Milwaukee this afternoon. The applicants were the trustees under the mortgage held by the Jarvis-Conklin company. The company agreed to the proceeding and Charles C. Prest was made the receiver. The receivership is practically the foreclosure of the mortgage, securing $1,100,000 of bonds issued September, 1891. The company has defaulted in interest due March and September of last year, and again in the interest due March 1 of this year. The total indebtedness claimed by the trustees, Samuel M. Jarvis of New York and John F. Downing of Kansas City, is $1,604,345.

Cuba's Rebellion.

Key West, Fla., March 19.—A trustworthy report of the condition of the affairs in the east end of Cuba is brought by a passenger on the steamer Macotte. "I have traveled throughout the mountainous district constantly since the trouble began," he said, "and matters are now in a much worse condition than at the beginning. The fighting started in a disultory and scattered fashion, but the forces gradually became crystalized, and there are now fully 6,000 insurgents under arms. They are in a dozen or more detachments, but are giving the government no end of trouble. In many cases the Spanish troops have been beaten back with heavy loss. The most deplorable feature of the warfare is the pillaging and burning."

Indians Poor Customers.

Sioux City, March 19.—The town of Armour, S. D., has a severe business depression just now, resulting from the dealings of its merchants with the Indians. The storekeepers sold great bills of goods to the Indians on the strength of payments the Indians were to receive on the land they had ceded to the government. The payments were not made on time, and the merchants suffer. The government owed the Indians $100,000 Oct. 15, and since then $60,000 has fallen due. About half of it has been paid. On account of the crop failure the past season the Indians would have starved on the half-rations issued them by the government but for the credit they were able to get at stores.

Broke Through the Ice.

Red Wing, Minn., March 19.—Julius Bratvold broke through the ice on a pond near Kenyon and was drowned. The ice had been recently cut and the place left unmarked.

Combined Kick.

London, March 19.—A dispatch from St. Petersburg says it is reported that all the Russian Mediterranean squadron has been ordered to the Pacific to be in readiness to make a positive demonstration in concert with Great Britain in regard to the Japanese demands on China.

Taylor Has Not Arrived.

Tampa, Fla., March 19.—Taylor, the absconding South Dakota treasurer, whom it was said would arrive here to-day, has not arrived.

In the matter of the Ives impeachment a number of petitions were introduced in the house yesterday morning, with 331 signers all told, from St. Hilaire, Grand Forks and Crookston. The petitions, regardless of party affilations, desire to express their earnest appreciations of the manly and courageous stand taken by Judge Ives in enforcing law and order", and they further condemn the efforts to remove him from office; instigated, as we believe they are either by personal spite and vindiciviness or by sympathy with and a desire to protect the lawless element in its crime. —Crookston Tribune.

This is a law making age, lets have more of them. Every legislature should be fined heavily that does not pass at least half a dozen laws every day, and thus earn its money. We want a law fining the man whose dog bark at night and whose roosters crow to early in the morning. The man should be fined who leaves a door open behind him on a cold day, who drives to church in a farm wagon, who will not let his children sleep as long in the morning as they want to; who buys patent medicine without knowing what it is made of, who sends away for supplies that his neighboring merchant has for sale in short we want millions of laws and yet legislators take time to sleep o' nights! —Farm, Stock and Home

The state department has received a dispatch from Minister Tailor at Madrid The Spanish government has given assurance to the United States that there will be no repetition of such offenses as firing upon the mailsteamer Alliance. The reply of the Spanish government is couched in courteous and diplomatic phrases and expresses the determination of Spain to avoid further cause of complaint on the part of the government. As to the attempted detention of the Alliance, the Spanish minister of foreign affairs says he is as yet without information, and adds that as soon as he shall have received a report from the captain general of Cuba concerning that incident a reply will be made to the demand contained in Secretary Graham's telegram. —Minneapolis Tribune.

Our gold plated bosses, who first predicted that stopping silver purchases would restore confidence and bring good times, and who when that prediction proved false said the settlement of the tariff question would do the business, and who followed the failure of that prescription with the declaration that the selling of gold bonds would demonstrate the strength of our credit abroad and so restore confidence and generate a business boom are now out with another prediction, that confesses the falsity of all the others; The adjournment of congress is now to bring the long deferred and much hoped for relief. Now that congress has adjourned "confidence" abides with us once more! that sword of Damocles no longer hangs over us farmers are now happy they will at once begin to buy merchants will rejoice, factories will be busy and everything will be lovely and serene. While the adjournment of Congress is a reasonable basis for a correct prediction of better times, we still do not believe that it will prove more of a panacea than the other remedies referred. None of these little surface plasters will cure the patient. —Farm Stock and Home.

MISTAKES IN STUFFING ANIMALS.

Tigers and Other Beasts and Birds That Don't Get Justice After Death.

"A walk along Broadway will show some curious sights to a naturalist," said a taxidermist. "Tigers may be seen with wide open mouths in the act of snarling viciously, the ears erect, the tongue between the lower incisors and the eyes wide open. There is a singular lack of ferocity in their appearance which a copious daubing of red paint inside the mouth is altogether inadequate to supply. The true attitude of a tiger when snarling is very different. In the first place, the ears are invariably laid close to the head, while the tongue is drawn back into the mouth as far as possible. The eyes are half closed, and the outer corners of the upper eyelids droop considerably. In nature there is very little of the vivid blood red so often used for the interior of the mouth.

"The most common error in stuffed heads of large deer is the position of the ears. They will often be found from six to ten inches back of the horns. In nature the ears of a large deer are never more than two or three inches behind the horns, while in the smaller deer they are close up against them. The eyes of a deer have a most peaceful, mild expression which is not represented by the distended, glaring eyeballs too often seen. Most of the heads are too large, owing to the desire of the taxidermist to make them as imposing as possible. Up to within a very few years ago artificial eyes could be obtained only with round pupils. Now the eyes of all the ruminants have oblong pupils. The pupil of a deer's eye is twice as long as it is broad, and an eye with a round pupil cannot possibly give the mild expression characteristic of all the deer tribe. About the most curious artificial eyes that I have ever come across were in the head of a stuffed deer which I bought from an Indian. When I took the head apart, I found the eyes to consist of the broken ends of two green glass bottles. Strange to say, the effect was surprisingly good, though they would not bear close scrutiny on account of the absence of any pupil.

"Most large animals when stuffed are placed in a position which they never occupy when alive. A tiger, lion or bear when standing keeps its legs close together and when walking places all his feet successively in almost identical positions. Hence the spoor of a lion or tiger consists of a series of tracks all in the same straight line. When stuffed, however, these animals usually assume a position in which the limbs are wide apart and seem to project from the body like the legs of a table. Birds are often perched upon a bough with a total disregard of the laws of gravity. The center of gravity in most birds lies midway in the body, at which place the legs should be placed. Among swimming and diving birds the legs are placed behind the center of gravity, which hampers their movements on land, but aids them considerably when in the water. The wings are generally too far back and too much on the side of the body, especially among the birds of prey. As a rule, though, birds do not present so many contradictions of nature as may be found among the beasts.

"Fishes used to be cast in plaster and then colored, but a year or two ago gelatin was used from a plaster mold, and the result has been very satisfactory. The love for establishing records has caused many tricks to be practiced by some taxidermists. The latest trick is to obtain a great breadth of the antlers on a deer's head by sawing the skull in half and turning the horns half around. By doing this the space between the antler tips is often increased a foot or more. Unless the head is taken apart this trick is rather difficult to discover, as the horns of deer often vary in position even though they be of the same species."—New York Sun.

What's In a Name?

They were engaged to be married and called each other by their first names—Tom and Fanny—and he was telling her how he had always liked the name of Fanny, and how it sounded like music in his ear. "I like the name so well," he added as a sort of clincher to the argument, "that when Sister Clara asked me to name her pet terrier I at once called it Fanny, after you, dearest."

"I don't think that was very nice," said the fair girl, edging away from him. "How would you like to have a dog named after you?"

"Why, that's nothing," said Tom airily. "Half the cats in the country are named after me."

They don't speak now.—London Quiver.

A Deep Place In the Pacific.

One of the deepest spots yet discovered in the Pacific ocean is near the Friendly islands in latitude 24 degrees 37 minutes south, longitude 75 degrees 8 minutes west. The depth there found was equal to about five English miles, and is said to be something like 5,000 feet greater depth than had yet been found in that vicinity.—St. Louis Republic.

A PERSIAN PRINCESS.

Her Brief Experience With the European Style of Dress.

My friend the princess came up to me in a somewhat confidential manner to ask me if I would allow her to don certain articles of my attire.

"All of us," she said, "have the greatest desire to become English in our dress and customs, but although such a privilege as that will never be granted us still I have a great wish to see how I should look in them, just for fun."

Entering into the joke, I led the way to my bedroom, but I hardly realized what difficulties were pending. She was not happy until I permitted her to begin from the very beginning of nethermost garments and had to work gradually upward. The stays she several times impressed upon me must on no account be omitted, but here a difficulty at once presented itself, for they would not meet within 10 or 12 inches. She was determined, however, not to be mastered, and it was not until the laces had been cut and lengthened and recut and tried on and taken off numberless times that she succeeded with a last tremendous struggle in fastening them around her.

Hoping that at last the efforts of attempting to put a Persian princess into European clothes were well nigh ended, for every fresh crack acted somewhat as a shock to my nervous system, I remarked, "Now that the toilet is drawing to completion does the princess find herself to her liking?"

"What is it you mean?" she exclaimed. "Why, the principal part is not yet begun. You do not wear your hair like this," said she as she drew up in her hand a bunch of some 30 or more narrow plaits that reached below her knees. At the request of a princess these tresses had of course to be all unplaited and combed out and twisted in masses of dusky coils around her small and shapely head that was well set upon her shoulders. Her hair was as thick, as coarse and as unmanageable as a horse's tail would be to dress, and as wiry also, and when it was at last, with a great deal of trouble, pinned up securely it covered the entire head three times over. This finishing stroke to her toilet gave the princess intense satisfaction, and she was full of childish admiration for herself.

"That is very good, very good," she remarked as she twisted herself, smiling, now this way, now that, before the mirror. "Every one would take me to be English. Now give me your hat with the long black feathers, and then I will walk down the garden to my brother's house and see if he will know me."

She left the room in a state of ecstasy over herself, but to return in an instant, with her fingers spread out before, exclaiming, "Khanum, khanum (lady), when you go out, do you not always wear gloves?"

For the princess to have walked even a short distance without any kind of escort and with her face unveiled showed that enterprise was not lacking in her character, for she had never taken such a bold step in her life before, and she was but 18. The costume that she had adopted, however, gave her confidence, for she knew she would not be recognized.

In spite of her admiration for herself in this costume she was in truth by no means altered for the better. In her own comparatively rough and tasteless dress she looked delicate and refined as compared with her eastern sisters, but immediately she assumed a more civilized attire her great charm vanished, and her former attractions seemed coarse and unprepossessing.

It was not long before the poor princess returned dejected and unhappy, with tears standing in her large brown eyes. Her brother, she told me, did not for some moments recognize her, but fancied her to be some European lady coming to make a visit to his wife. "When he saw it was me, his sister," she remarked, "his countenance became black as the thunderclouds, and he bade me with all haste change my dress, for he was filled with shame at seeing that a daughter of his father's wife could so greatly bemean herself as to attempt to imitate a European."—Bridget Sunwell in London Queen.

Judge Hoar.

Judge Hoar was a man of spirit to the very end. During his last illness an unsettled business affair with a man named Coffin worried him, and one of his sons undertook to relieve his father's anxiety by taking the matter in hand. Having settled it, he went into the sick man's room and said, "Well, father, I've fixed up the Coffin business." The judge smiled and said, "Aren't you a little previous, my son?"

It Was Proper.

"But, great heavens, man! You've no right to treat any woman with such impudent disdain."

"Oh, that's all right. She's my wife, and she knows mighty well she deserves contempt for being fool enough to marry me."—New York Recorder.

The gabardine, so often mentioned by Shakespeare, was a cloak for rainy weather. In several countries the Jewish people were compelled by law to wear gabardines as a distinctive article of dress.

"Come, Landlord, Fill the Flowing Bowl" dates from the time of Shakespeare. It was introduced in one of Fletcher's plays, "The Bloody Brother."

TWENTY-FIVE YEARS AGO.

A Bird's-Eye View of the United States in 1870.

In 1870 the United States covered the same tract of the earth's surface as now, amounting to 4,000,000 square miles. Hardly more than a fifth of this represented the United States of 1789. About a third of the vast domain was settled, the western frontier running irregularly parallel with the Mississippi, but nearer to that stream than to the Rocky mountains.

The center of population was forty-eight miles east by north of Cincinnati, having moved westward forty-two miles since 1860. Except certain well-peopled sections on the Pacific slope, and little civilized strips in Utah, Colorado and New Mexico, the Great West had but one tenuous population. Over immense regions it was still an Indian fastness, rejoicing in a reputation, which few could verify, for rare scenery, fertile valleys, rich mines and a wondrous climate.

The American people numbered 38,558,371 souls. In the settled parts of our country the population had a density of 30.3 persons to the square mile, Southern New England being the most closely peopled. Much of Western Pennsylvania was in the condition of the newest states, railroad building as never before, population increasing at a remarkable rate, and industries developing on every hand.

Petroleum, which, before the civil war, had been skimmed off the streams of the oil region and sold for medicine, in 1870 developed a yield of over 5,000,000 gallons in Pennsylvania alone, more than ten times as much as a decade previous.

The West was rapidly recruiting itself from the East, the city from the country. Between 1790 and 1860 our urban population had increased from one in thirty to one in six; in 1870 more than one in five dwelt in cities.—Scribner's.

A novelty for a dinner table center piece is a bright copper bowl, filled with water, in which are floating glass bubbles and live gold fish. Surrounding the bowl are verbenas, and in each corner of the table are placed vase-shaped bottles of pale-green glass filled with apple blossoms and red Japanese quince. These are paper-made, but exquisitely real.

SERVED IN TWO WARS.

THE GRIP ALMOST WON WHERE THE BULLET FAILED.

From Woodstock, Va., Herald.

There is an old soldier in Woodstock, Va., who served in the war with Mexico and in the war of the rebellion, Mr. Levi McInturff. He passed through both these wars without a serious wound. The hardships, however, told seriously on him, for when the grip attacked him four years ago it nearly killed him. Who can look on the infirmities of a veteran without a feeling of the deepest sympathy? His townspeople saw him confined to his house so prostrated with great nervousness that he could not hold a knife and fork at the table, scarcely able to walk too, and as he attempted it, he often stumbled and fell. They saw him treated by the best talent to be had—but still he suffered on for four years, and gave up finally in despair. One day, however, he was struck by the account of a cure which had been effected by the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. He immediately ordered a box and commenced taking them. He says he was greatly relieved within three days time. The blood found its way to his fingers and his hands which had been palsied assumed a natural color, and he was soon enabled to use his knife and fork at the table. He has recovered his strength to such an extent that he is able to chop wood, shock corn and do his regular work about his home. He now says he can not only walk to Woodstock, but can walk across the mountains. He is able to lift a fifty-two pound weight with one hand and says he does not know what Dr. Williams' Pink Pills have done for others, but knows that they have done a great work for him.

He was in town last Monday, court day, and was loud in his praises of the medicine that had given him so great relief. Mr. McInturff is willing to make affidavit to these facts.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills were used for many years by an eminent practitioner who produced the most wonderful results with them, curing all forms of weakness arising from watery blood or shattered nerves, two causes of almost every ill to which flesh is heir. The pills are also a specific for the troubles peculiar to females, such as suppressions, all forms of weakness, chronic constipation, bearing down pains, etc., and in the case of men will give speedy relief and effect a permanent cure in all cases arising from mental worry, overwork, or excesses of whatever nature. They are entirely harmless and can be given to weak and sickly children with the greatest good. Pink Pills are sold by all dealers, or will be sent post paid on receipt of price, (50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50—by addressing Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y.

The English Novel.

The abolishment of the three-volume novel in England has resulted in the introduction of smaller, much poorer type in the one-volume substitute. This has been made necessary by compressing three volumes into one. The average English novel is between 120,000 and 150,000 words long, and in three-volume shape there was ample room for wide margins and good type, which there is not in the single book. There is not much chance of the novelist making their books any shorter, as they are paid by the publishers so much per thousand words. For them to curtail the length would mean financial loss.—Philadelphia Ledger.

WOMEN'S FACES—like flowers, fade and wither with time; the bloom of the rose is only known to the healthy woman's cheeks. The nervous strain caused by the ailments and pains peculiar to the sex, and the labor and worry of rearing a family, can often be traced by the lines in the woman's face. Dull eyes, the sallow or wrinkled face and those "feelings of weakness" have their rise in the derangements and irregularities peculiar to women. The functional derangements, painful disorders, and chronic weaknesses of women, can be cured with Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. For the young girl just entering womanhood, for the mother and those about to become mothers, and later in "the change of life," the "Prescription" is just what they need; it aids nature in preparing the system for the change. It's a medicine prescribed for thirty years, in the diseases of women, by Dr. R. V. Pierce, chief consulting physician to the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, at Buffalo, N. Y. Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription will cure the chronic inflammation of the lining membranes which cause such exhausting drains upon the system. It cures nervous prostration, sleeplessness, faintness, nervous debility and all disorders arising from derangement of the female organs and functions.

Mrs. JENNIE WILLIAMS, of Mohawk, Lane Co., Oregon, writes: "I was sick for over three years with blind dizzy spells, palpitation of the heart, pain in the back and head, and at times would have such a weak tired feeling when I first got up in the morning, and at times nervous chills. The physicians differed as to what my disease was, but none of them did me any good. As soon as I commenced taking Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, I began to get better; could sleep well nights, and that bad nervous feeling and the pain in my back soon left me. I can walk several miles without getting tired. I took in all three bottles of 'Prescription' and two of 'Discovery.'"

MRS. WILLIAMS.

Some Schoolboy Answers.

Here are some schoolboy answers to examination questions: "A point," wrote one boy, "is that which will not appear any bigger, even if you get a magnifying glass." "Two straight lines cannot inclose a space unless they are crooked," said another who may have had Irish blood in his veins. "Parallel straight lines are those which meet at the far end of infinity," is equal to some poetry. "Things which are impossible are equal to one another," is common sense though it is not exactly mathematical.—Living Church.

Accidental Humor.

I heard the other day an amusing tale of a certain well known English nobleman, who had imported two emus with the hope of breeding from them; and on leaving the estate for town left also strict injunctions that the greatest care should be taken of the lady emu, if she produced the desired egg or eggs. The egg arrived in due course, but, as artists have found before now, the lady declined to "sit." The steward, however, was an ingenious man, and thought of a substitute, but his powers of composition were by no means on a par with his inventiveness, and he announced the interesting event to his master in the following terms:

"The emu has laid an egg, but we were in great difficulty, as she would not sit on it. I did what I thought was best, and in your lordship's absence I have placed the egg under the biggest goose on the estate."

CHINESE AVENGERS.

STRANGE STORY OF SECOND SIGHT FROM CANADA.

A Vision Gives the Inhabitants of an Ontario Village Reason to Think That an Old Man Was Murdered and That His Death Has Been Avenged.

This is the tale told to the Philadelphia Times correspondent by the parish priest of Warwickville, Ontario:

Ten years ago old man DeLore was locally famous as a miser with much wealth, and likewise bore the reputation of being in league with the devil. So it was every one, school-children and timid grown folks alike, shunned his house and company. He had but two friends; one a huge and villainous bull-dog, the other a dissolute young man named Gaston Devroul, who had come to Warwickville some years before from Montreal, and was reputed to be the old man's nephew. Devroul did not live with his uncle, but boarded with a border smuggler now dead, and it was hinted the only work he did was to occasionally help his host in his risky trips to the states and return with dutiable goods.

Old DeLore was accustomed to take trips sometimes of two or three months' duration, and the general supposition was that at such times he was either in communication with his satanic partner, or was over the border on a smuggling expedition. So no comment arose when it was noticed in the winter of 1885 that his house was closed and apparently unoccupied.

When the spring turned to summer, and summer to autumn, however, without the return of the miser, his long absence became the topic of mild and quiet discussion. It was remembered that Devroul had not been seen in the neighborhood for several months, but whether he had gone with his uncle, or had wandered away on his own account, no one knew or cared.

Somewhere about the holidays of 1893 a stranger came to Warwickville and it was soon known his name was William Jones of New York, and that he was seeking a dwelling. None could be had, however, and he was about to depart when the DeLore house attracted his eye and he at once declared it to be exactly suited to his needs. The tales of the villagers he pronounced rot, and he even laughed at their statements, whereat there was a general shaking of heads and a consensus of opinion that he would regret his rashness sooner or later.

Jones' renovations were slight and he made no additions to the scanty furnishings excepting in the way of bedding and linen. There was something mysterious about Jones. After village gossip had lulled he came and went unnoticed, but everybody knew he lived entirely alone in his strangely selected abode and it was rumored that he had crossed the frontier in a great hurry to avoid a Yankee sheriff. He made no friends save, oddly enough, the village priest, a kindly man of French birth, who was attracted by Jones' apparent loneliness to open an acquaintance which ripened into friendship; not on account of religion, for Jones professed to be a Protestant, but for the reason that the new comer was educated and a gentleman, something rare enough in the priest's limited sphere.

One day Jones met Father Larcien and begged him to come and spend the night with him. The father consented, albeit somewhat uneasily, for Canadian superstitions are firmly rooted even in clerical bosoms. When his guest was thoroughly at home, Jones told him the reason for his unexpected hospitality. Just one year ago that night he had witnessed a strange spectacle outside: the sight of an old man struggling in the clutches of a younger, who threw him to the ground and repeatedly stabbed him, while mingled with the horrible howling of a dog rose the words in a fear-inspiring tone: "One year more. One more, and then revenge, revenge."

Even as he spoke the hoarse barking of a dog broke forth, apparently at the doorstep. Jones leaped from the window, dragging with him the bewildered priest. The night was pitchy dark, but in a space about ten feet in diameter and 100 feet from the house a peculiar radiance brought into strong relief two figures, one an old man, ghastly pale, with blood pouring from gaping wounds in his breast, pointing his bony finger at the other, a younger man, grasping a dripping knife. "Heaven protect us," gasped the priest; "it is old De Lore and Devroul." Amid the mournful howling of the dog came the words: "At last; at last; revenged, revenged."

While they gazed the scene changed like a dissolving view. The old man remained as before, but as through a mist came the sight of a man in the garb of a soldier, at the mercy of a score of yellow-faced fiends incarnate. With diabolical glee they tortured him with molten lead, and, with their cutlasses gradually dismembered his body, finally ending by cutting off his head and sticking it on a pole. "Mother of Mercies, it is Devroul," gasped the priest. Then summoning of courage he shouted: "By virtue of the Cross, I bid you begone." Instantly darkness and silence reigned.

Neither Jones nor his guest closed their eyes that night, and next day the New Yorker announced his intention of returning to the states. In the afternoon Father Larcien came to him bearing a Toronto paper, pointing without speaking to a cablegram from Japan, which read:

"Among the victims of the Chinese atrocities at Port Arthur was Gaston Devroul, a wealthy young Frenchman who had entered the Japanese army and had been taken prisoner by the Chinese a few days before the fall of the town. His head was found impaled upon a stake by his fellow-soldiers."

Severe, But Wise.

"About how old a woman ought to marry, Mrs. Jones?"

"That depends on your own age."

"Well, you see, I—ah"—

"Yes; if you're under 35 you'll marry a young woman. If you're over 45 there are plenty of little girls at the grammar school in the next street."

RISE OF THE KU-KLUX KLAN.

It Sprang From the Old Night Patrol of Slavery Times.

The chief instrumentality at first used for keeping colored voters from the polls after the war was the Ku Klux Klan, a secret society organized in Tennessee in 1866. It sprung from the old night patrol of slavery times. Then every Southern gentleman used to serve on this patrol, whose duty it was to whip severely every negro found absent from home without a pass from his master. Its first post-bellum work was not ill meant, and its severities came on gradually.

Its greatest activity was in Tennessee, Arkansas and Mississippi, where its awful mysteries and gruesome rites spread utter panic among the superstitious blacks. Men visited negroes' huts and "mummicked" about at first with sham magic, not with arms at all. One would carry a flesh bag in the shape of a heart and go around "hollering for fried nigger meat." Another would put on an india-rubber stomach to startle the negroes by swallowing pailfuls of water.

Another represented that he had been killed at Manassas, since which time "some one had built a turpike over his grave and he had to scratch to get up through the gravel." The lodges were "dens," the members "ghouls," "giants," "goblins," "titans," "furies," "dragons" and "hydras," were names of different classes among the officers.

Usually the mere existence of a "den" anywhere was sufficient to render docile every negro in the vicinity. If anything more was required a half-dozen "ghouls," making their nocturnal rounds in their hideous masks and long white gowns, frightened all but the most hardy.—Scribner.

Lillian Russell's Youth.

Lillian Russell is always the talk of the town when she comes here. Her engagement this time was no exception. Here are some bits about her which may be new to the new generation:

She was a pupil of the Sacred Heart Convent of this city for nine years, and it was there she learned French and German.

She sang in "Pinafore," in E. E. Rice's company when she was seventeen years old, when she married and retired.

One day she was singing in a parlor in a house where Tony Pastor called. He asked who she was and afterwards met her. He engaged her at a salary of $50 a week to sing ballads—"The Kerry Dance" and "Twickenham Ferry" were two of her most popular songs. She received several offers while she was with Pastor, but refused them until her contract with Tony Pastor was fulfilled.—Chicago Tribune.

HE DID NOT LIKE PERFUMES.

But the Reminiscent Odor of a Cigar Was Another Matter.

It was at a lecture; the room was hot and crowded, and Mrs. Bittersweet noticed her husband was suffering under a sense of injury.

"What is it, dear?" she whispered, under cover of one of the speaker's rounded periods.

Mr. Bittersweet's sniffs became more audible. "It's the abominable odor of perfumery in the room," he puffed. "I am almost asphyxiated by it. Why, I can count fourteen distinct scents every time the women about us applaud."

"Oh, well, try not to notice it," whispered his wife, with that cheerfulness always displayed by the friends of the sufferer in such cases, "do listen to the lecture; it is just splendid."

"Humph! I suppose you like the odor; women always do like whatever costs money. Do you happen to know how much is spent annually on perfumery in America alone?"

"No, dear, I don't. What is it?"

"Um—well, I don't remember the exact figures just now, but I assure you it is something enormous. For my part I think that the carrying of perfumes into public places should be prohibited by law, and the amount of money which would otherwise have been wasted upon them might then go towards endowing an asylum for those idiots who don't know that others have rights in public—"

"Sh—sh! You are disturbing people. The lady in the violet bonnet is looking daggers at you."

"Humph! the one whose handkerchief is poisoned with patchouli; I don't care if she isn't pleased. Say, I think I'll step out for a cigar."

"Do," said his wife with a smile. "I thought something beside the perfume was troubling you."

He came back before long with a smiling face and settled himself down contentedly in his place. As he did so the lady in the violet bonnet, who sat next to him, began to wave her handkerchief before her face.

"Isn't it awful," she whispered to her companion, "wherever one goes it is just the same—some horrid man poisons the air with the odor of stale tobacco; positively I couldn't endure it if I hadn't some strong perfume about me as an antidote."

Veal cutlets, which are often too dry to be attractive food, are, says a professional cook, improved by breading, putting in a frying pan with thin slices of bacon, and cooking in the oven for fifteen minutes. Finish by browning on the top of the stove. Serve with them a mushroom or tomato sauce, when you want a dish that is extra good.

A High Financial Authority.

"Can you tell me about the credit and standing of Mr. Graham?" asked the Great Financier of the Prominent Chicago Society Lady.

"Standing very high, credit unimpeachable," replied the lady.

"You have excellent means of knowing this, I suppose?" queried the Great Financier.

"The very best means possible," replied the lady. "He is my divorced husband."

"How about the standing and credit of Col. Gaskill?"

"First class in every respect," replied the lady.

"You have equally good authority for this statement?"

"Yes; he is another divorced husband of mine."

"How about the credit and standing of Mr. Woodbridge?"

"Notoriously poor. No standing, no credit whatever."

"What is your authority this time?"

"Oh, he is my present undivorced husband."

Origin of the Blouse.

After the fall of the Roman Empire the sexes started about fair in the matter of clothes. Our Teutonic ancestors adopted a costume which was almost the same for men and women, and consisted of two main garments, the Roman tunica and toga. The tunica was virtually a shirt with long sleeves, and was buckled at the waist. The men wore it reaching to the knee and the women to the ankles. In colder northern latitudes the men, as a great innovation, added trousers, but these were looked upon in the light of a distinct extra, and were not considered obligatory in hot weather. There seems to be no doubt that the blouse of the modern peasant is a direct descendant of the tunica.—Lippincott's Magazine.

The Order of the Empire of India was one of Beaconsfield's ideas to compliment Queen Victoria. It was founded in 1877.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

WORK OF THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings in the Senate and House, Comprising a Brief Summary of the Week's Business.

St. Paul, March 21.—At 2 o'clock the governor signed H. F. No. 1, the Anderson bill, providing for submitting to the people an amendment to the constitution by which unused railway lands in the state may be taxed. Gov. Clough this morning signed the Theden bill, knocking out the Rand ordinance, and allowing any citizen to complain of a saloon.

The senate spent the day in committee of the whole, debating the provisions of the city charter bill. It was finished with the exception of the chapter on water works and a few scattering sections.

During the debate a number of minor changes and amendments were made and some changes which are considered important and may have an influence upon the final passage of the bill. Among the latter is the change limiting the bond issue of all cities to 5 per cent of their property valuation. The bill as amended in the municipal corporation committee, allowed cities having less than 8,000 inhabitants to issue bonds not to exceed 10 per cent of their property valuation.

Senator Stevens secured three amendments that will please the advocates of business methods in city affairs. The section forbidding aldermen to solicit jobs for political friends was amended, making its violation sufficient cause for removal. The maximum salary schedule urged by certain associations in St. Paul was adopted. It is to apply until the council shall have fixed the salaries by a three-fourths vote. All police officers under the grade of captain are to be granted a trial before the city council prior to removal, but the mayor has power to suspend them from duty pending such trial.

In the House.

The house broke all previous records and passed twenty-three bills, including the omnibus game and fish bill and the Zier bill authorizing the formation of fire patrols and salvage corps in cities of over 5,000 inhabitants. The Cronkhite bill requiring all stone used in state buildings to be quarried, cut and dressed within the state; the Masterman bills, making it a penal offense to open the gates of dams on logging streams and fixing the penalties for falsifying scale bills, and the Robbins bill, authorizing counties to commit inebriates to gold cure establishments, were also passed.

Following are among the other bills passed:

McHale, relating to independent school districts; Miller, to authorize the use of waters of meandered lakes and streams for protection of cranberry marshes; Thorpe, relating to the duties of county superintendents of schools; Thompson to legalize the taking of acknowledgements and other official acts heretofore taken and done by any person previously appointed and acting as a notary public; Masterman, to amend section 480 of the Penal Code; Mathieson, to appropriate money to the dairymen's association; Grondahl, relating to the levy and collection of special assessments in cities of less than 25,000 inhabitants; committee on public lands, relating to the Itasca State Park; committee on towns and counties, to provide for the bonding of counties to build court houses; Sederberg, relating to bonding counties for poor farm, roads and bridges.

The game and fish bill, which passed the house, makes several changes in the open seasons for game and fish. No change is made in the open seasons for prairie chickens, partridge, grouse or quail. The use of pond nets in interstate waters is permitted under certain conditions. Moose, elk and caribou are protected until Jan. 1, 1898. The open seasons are:

Wild ducks, geese, brant and snipe—Sept. 1 to April 15.

Golden plover—Sept. 1 to June 1.

Deer—Nov. 1 to Nov. 20 (and only five deer may be killed by any one person during the season).

Bass, wall-eyed pike, etc.—May 1 to March 1.

The board may authorize citizens of the state to take with spears during December and January and February from the inland lakes for home consumption any fish except bass, wall-eyed pike and trout.

The shipment from the state of any variety of bass, pike or trout caught in the inland waters is prohibited.

St. Paul, March 22. — It was city charter day in the senate, although some general business was transacted during the morning session. The Howard charter bill was given its final touches and passed by a vote of 41 to 1, a number of the senators refraining from voting. It was amended in many of its sections, but the general theory of the bill stands as it came from the committee on municipal corporations.

The unexpected feature of the session was the approval in the committee of the whole of Senator Sheehan's home rule constitutional amendment. It was taken up after the passage of the Howard charter bill, amended and approved by a handsome majority. The principal change made was that it extends the right to make a charter to all the cities and villages in the state. As originally drawn its operation was limited to cities having more than 50,000 population. It must now come up for final passage in its turn on the calendar, but no further opposition is expected.

The features of the bill are familiar to all newspaper readers. It provides for submission to the people at the next general election the question of amending article 4 of the constitution so that cities may frame their own charters under certain general restrictions imposed by the legislature.

In the House.

In the house a number of bills were advanced from general orders to the calendar. Among the bills recommended to pass was the one to regulate the use of pound nets in international waters; to establish two additional state experimental farms and amending the country elevator laws. The Pipestone and Crookston normal school bills were defeated, but the former was resurrected and is now on the table.

The public lands committees of the house and senate unanimously decided to recommend for passage the pine land investigating committee bill introduced by Mr. Staples, and with the same unanimity recommended for indefinite postponement the bill introduced by Mr. Gibbs. The mineral land bills of Mr. Staples and Senator Hodge were also recommended for passage.

Mr. Jacobson introduced a resolution fixing the time for commencing at 7:30 a. m.; noon recess from 12:30 until 2 p. m., and afternoon session until adjournment. The resolution was adopted.

The arrival of a pair of twins in the household of Mr. Cant was the occasion of the presentation of a box of cigars to the happy father.

The fight of the afternoon came over Mr. Craig's bill, providing for the establishment of two additional experimental farms—on in the Red river valley and the other in the northern central portion of the state. The bill was sent to the calendar with more than enough votes to pass it.

St. Paul, March 23.—The senate had a very busy day and accomplished some of the most important work of the session. During the afternoon it discussed at great length and passed two bills, one of which will interest every voter in Minnesota. It is a primary election law. The bill was a substitute for all others on the subject. As near as possible the bill adapts itself to the usual method of holding primaries, but puts them under the sanction of law and prescribes such rules and regulations as the senators hope may prevent fraud and corruption. It prohibits illegal voting, requires a list of the names to be kept and reported, gives the right of challenge, and imposes penalties for false affidavits. The other bill creates a fire warden department under the state auditor. Its general provisions are the organization of a fire warden force in each county subject to forest fires. The law compels the service of every male person over 18 years of age to aid in fighting fire. It also prescribes fines and penalties for setting fires, or neglecting to put them out, regulates the smoke stacks of locomotives, and requires railway companies to keep their right of way clear.

The important matter to inhabitants of cities and villages acted upon during the morning session was the much-discussed Sheehan home rule bill. It was passed without debate, and will go to the house of representatives to be voted upon as section 36, article 4, of the constitution. Other bills passed:

Thompson—A bill to provide for the reincorporation of villages of 2,000 inhabitants or over.

Feig—To establish the office of state entomologist at the experimental station for the destruction of chinch bugs.

Pottgeiser—To provide that a personal service of notice must be made before the right to redeem land or real property from sales for local improvements or other assessments can be extinguished.

Substitute S. F. 48, 197, 186—For an act for the suppression and prevention of forest and prairie res.

Culkin (substitute for S. F. Nos. 125, 166, 211, 228 and 284)—For an act relating to primary elections.

In the House.

The house worked industriously, and disposed of fifteen bills on general orders. The bill to reduce the penalty on delinquent taxes for 1892 and prior years was discussed and recommended for passage. Dr. Zier's salvage carps bill was indefinitely postponed, and the one reducing the penalty on delinquent taxes to 7 per cent was recommended to pass. Tuesday afternoon of next week was the time designated for the consideration of the prison labor bills. The expenses of the four contestants for seats in the house amounting to $4,105, were recommended to be paid.

Of the bills introduced, Mr. Baston's, requiring cleanliness in bakeries, was the most important. It is carefully drawn, and, if it becomes a law, the products of bakeries will be more wholesome in the future.

The protest of the Minneapolis druggists against the passage of Dr. Zier's second patent medicine bill was sent to the desk and that gentleman objected to its being read. P. H. Kelly and other members supported the doctor, and the petition was laid on the table without having been read.

Under the order of business, introduction of bills, twenty-two would-be laws were read and referred to committees.

St. Paul, March 24.—The senate in committee of the whole approved Senator Ozmun's civil service bill, known as S. F. No. 273. There was not a large attendance and it is possible that the bill may not secure the necessary twenty-eight votes when it comes up for passage, but its safe journey through the committee of the whole was a surprise, and its subsequent defeat would be unusual.

The bill is a fitting companion to the Ramsey senator's corrupt practices act, both being distinct advances along the line of purity in politics. The latter is through the senate and calmly sleeping somewhere in the house. Its author hopes the former may have a safe journey through the senate and join forces with the other, when both may be able to secure recognition from members of the lower branch of the legislature.

The civil service act provides for a state board of three persons, to be appointed by the governor for a term of six years, and to serve without compensation. The board will divide the offices into two classes, much after the fashion of the national civil service, and for the holding of examinations for appointments to the civil service positions. In main outline the object is to appoint persons to public positions because of fitness and not on account of political activity, supposed influence and as a reward for partisan service. The bill originally carried a small appropriation to provide for the expenses of the state board and similar local board to be appointed for the various cities, but the appropriation was stricken out on motion of its author, who thus prevented its opponents from a covert attack on its principles.

The senate spent an hour just before adjournment upon Senator Cole's bill to appropriate out of the general fund of the treasury an amount sufficient to reimburse the counties in which untaxed railroad lands are situated for the loss sustained by their own treasuries through the operation of the gross earnings tax system. The matter came up in committee of the whole and the bill was recommended for passage by a vote of 24 to 16.

In the House.

In the house the report of the committee on public lands indefinitely postponing the pine land bill, H. F. 602—Gibbs—stirred up the house and the committee was indorsed by a vote of three to one. The committee's (Staples') bill was made a special order for 2 p. m. on Wednesday.

The entire afternoon was taken up with the consideration of the census bill, which was amended until it resembled a crazy quilt, and then defeated by a vote of 47 to 51. The census committee was instructed to prepare a bill providing for an enumeration of population only.

Mr. Furlong introduced a proposed constitutional amendment authorizing the legislature to appropriate not to exceed $100,000 annually to aid in the construction of roads and bridges. Mr. Holman introduced the Miller senate bill declaring express companies to be common carriers and placing them under the jurisdiction of the railroad and warehouse commissioners. Three bills to appropriate money for roads and bridges, which has been carried over from yesterday, the last day allowed for the introduction of bills appropriating money from the internal improvement fund, were introduced.

There were eighteen bills reported back from committees and sixteen new ones, making a total number of house files to date 737 introduced.

St. Paul, March 26.—The senate after a debate of some length in committee of the whole decided by a vote of twenty-three to twelve to recommend for passage the bill known as the age of consent bill. In brief it proposes to raise from sixteen to eighteen years the age at which a female can, in contemplation of the law, consent to sexual intercourse. It is an amendment to the section of the penal code on the subject and the penalty for carnally knowing a female between the years of fourteen and eighteen is imprisonment in the state prison for not less than one nor more than seven years.

Among the bills passed was Gutterson's good roads bill and making John S. Pillsbury a regent of the state university for life.

In the House.

In the house thirteen bills on the calendar were passed. Among them was Senator Cronkhite's bill providing for a hard fiber twine plant in the state prison, and appropriating $16,000 in addition to the $15,000 already available for that purpose. Mr. Gibbs' bill making Hon. John S. Pillsbury a life member of the board of regents of the state university was also passed.

In the afternoon, in committee of the whole, J. N. Jones' anti-screen, chair, table, back door, etc., saloon bill was indefinitely postponed. The Wyman protection of employes bill was recommended for passage. Mr. Hartshorn's bill making the wife responsible for debts of her husband was recommended to be indefinitely postponed, but it was excepted from the report of the committee, and laid on the table.

The Howard charter bill was received from the senate, read and made a special order for Thursday at 2 p. m. The Sheehan home rule bill was also made a special order to be taken up immediately following the debate and final vote on the Howard bill.

Among the bills passed were: Blagik, limiting terms of aldermen in cities to two years; Johus, to prohibit the obstruction of public levees of cities on navigable waters; Blagik, authorizing cities to create the office of weighmaster; Vigen, amending "an act to regulate elections;" Robbins, to exempt the scales of certain elevators, mill and railroad yards from the jurisdiction of city sealers of weights and measures; Brevig, to amend laws relating to the organization of school districts; committee on education, for the encouragement of higher education in village and town public schools; Jacobson, to prevent railway corporations charging excess for overloading cars.

They May Be Lynched.

Birmingham, Ala., March 26.—Isaac Tankersley, Isam Falls, John Roberts and Mac Falls, negroes, are in jail here charged with a brutal attack upon Mr. and Mrs. John Barr last night. There is intense excitement and some talk of lynching. Barr, who has a store at Tuscaloosa, was returning home last night with his wife, having in his pocket the proceeds of the day's sales. The couple were attacked by the four negroes and both were beaten into insensibility. Barr was probably fatally injured. Mrs. Barr identified Tankersley as one of their assailants, and he confessed, implicating the other three.

Had His Watch.

Pensacola, Fla., March 26—The body of young Frank Keller of Findlay, Ohio, who was murdered and robbed near River Junction, has been disinterred and carried home by his father for burial. John Fort, a logman of that vicinity, has been arrested for the crime. He went out hunting on the day of the murder and was afterward seen with a large sum of money and a gold watch. The watch was identified by Keller's father as that worn by his son when he left home.

Fight With a Maniac.

Paris, Mo., March 26.—Sheriff Umstadt and posse, while attempting to arrest Thomas Moulawa, a maniac living near here were forced to shoot him and beat him into insensibility. He fought like a tiger. Several of the posse were injured before the maniac was overpowered.

Died Suddenly.

Washington, March 26. — Lycurgus Dalton, aged 50, postmaster of the house of representatives for five terms died last night.

CHANG IS INJURED.

AN ATTEMPT TO ASSASSINATE THE VICEROY OF CHINA.

While Returning From a Conference With the Japanese Peace Envoys He Is Fired Upon by A Gang of Japanese, and Wounded in the Face.

Simonski, March 20.—As Li Hung Chang, the Chinese peace envoy, was returning to his lodgings in this place to-day, after having attended a conference with Count Ito and Viscount Mutsu, the Japanese peace plenipotentiary, a young Japanese fired a pistol at him. The bullet sped straight, but most fortunately did no more harm than to inflict a wound in Li Hung Chang's face. At the time of sending this dispatch it is impossible to tell whether or not the wound is serious.

The attempt to assassinate the representative of the Emperor of China caused the most intense excitement, and on every side there were expressions of deep regret. The would-be murderer was arrested. It is believed that he was prompted to the crime by misguided patriotism.

The name of the young man who attempted the life of Li Hung Chang is Koyama Bodunosuki. His reasons are unknown. Li Hung Chang was shot in the cheek. It is believed the wound is not serious. Prime Minister Ito has telegraphed to Hiroshima asking that Dr. Sato, the imperial physician be sent to Shimonoseki to attend the Chinese commissioner. The ministers of state and a number of other officials have visited Li Hung Chang and expressed their deep sympathy and sorrow at the occurrence. Every precaution has been taken by the police and military to prevent any trouble. The government profoundly regrets the affair.

BUTTER FAT.

A Discovery Said to Be Worth Millions of Dollars.

Ithica, N. Y., March 26.—The agricultural department at Cornell claims to have made an important discovery which will prove of great economic value to farmers. It is found that butter fat can be extracted from whey by running it through a separator. The department has now in press a bulletin explaining the process. It is estimated that the general adoption of the process would save the agricultural interests of New York State nearly $1,000,000 a year, or, to put it in another way, that the entire expense of making cheese would be paid by the saving of what has heretofore been a waste of product.

Smallpox in Milwaukee.

Milwaukee, March 26.—The smallpox, which was for some weeks last summer and fall epidemic in this city, and which has kept the health department busy all winter, is practically wiped out. The isolation hospitals have been closed and there are now only six cases in the city. In nine months there have been 1,011 cases and 268 deaths. The authorities have had many evils to cope within their work of suppressing the disease. Mobs have fought the health officials who were sent to remove patients to the hospitals, and a constant warfare has been waged in certain quarters against the methods of coping with the pest.

Bad for Japan.

Washington, March 26.—The news of the assault on Li Hung Chang caused a sensation in diplomatic circles in this city. Cases where an envoy of any kind have been assaulted in the country to which he is accredited are rare, and those in which a peace commissioner is attacked are almost unheard of in modern days. The opinion here is that Japan will suffer greatly as a consequence of the assault, and that the position of China will be so strengthened that she may be able to secure better terms of peace than she could otherwise have hoped for.

Sullivan Is Recovering.

Boston, March 26.—John L. Sullivan, who caught a severe cold last week, which threatened to develop into pneumonia, was resting comfortably, and Dr. Ordway, his physician, says that if he can keep the big fellow in doors for a few days longer all danger will have passed. Sullivan has been confined to his room at the home of his sister, with whom he is at present making his home, for four days, and on Friday night his condition was considered serious. Good nursing and medical attendance, he says, has put him on his feet again.

Whistler Wanted to Fight.

Paris, March 26.—It was dveloped that a week ago Whistler, the artist, challenged Sir George Moore, the novelist to fight a duel. Mr. Moore was the intermediary in the now more or less famous dispute between Mr. Whistler and Sir William Eden, growing out of the refusal of the former to deliver a portrait he had painted of Sir William's wife. Mr. Moore ignored the challenge and Mr. Whistler has written to his seconds regarding his dealings with what he calls "a runaway."

Strike of a Thousand.

Youngstown, Ohio, March 26.—One thousand operatives in Andrews Bros.' rolling mill struck to-day because the firm discharged three puddlers. The firm says these puddlers were discharged for cause.

Gen. Greenland Dead.

Pittsburg, March 26.—Gen. Walter W. Greenland, ex-adjutant general of Pennsylvania, died last night at his home at Clarion, Pa., after a lingering illness.

Probably Suicided.

Pipestone, Minn., March 26. — Herman Johnson, aged twenty-three, was found dead in a barn on a farm seven miles in the country with a shotgun wound in his left side. It was presumably a suicide.

Labor Riot at Liege.

Liege, March 26.—Another collision occurred between the strikers and the police with revolvers, but without effect. The police returned the fire, wounding many persons, and ending the riot.

STORM IN BRITAIN.

Many People are Killed and a Large Number Wounded.

London, March 26.—A terrible gale set in late last night and is still prevailing. The storm is general throughout Great Britain. There has been immense damage to property in many of the large towns. Pinnacles, roofs and chimneys of a number of churches were blown off and many manufactories were similarly damaged. In many places church services were suspended. A great number of trees were prostrated by the gale and much damage was done to the dwelling houses. In many parts of the country the telegraph lines are down. A few minor casualties are reported from along the coast. Many people have been injured by falling debris. A wall collapsed in the east end of London and three persons were crushed to death beneath it. Three turrets of the pinnacles on the west front of the Petersborough cathedral were blown down. Other buildings in the town were damaged and a number of persons were injured. The roof of the railway station at Stratford-on-Avon was blown off and a number of monuments in the Paris churchyard were damaged. At Birmingham the gale was felt with exceptional severity. A man and three children were killed there. The property damage in the town is estimated at thousands of pounds.

Ten men and a girl in Leicester were struck by falling debris and almost instantly killed. Every house in the Aylestone district was damaged. In Wolverhampton one person was killed and twelve injured.

In Walsall two chimney stacks were blown over. They crashed through the roof of a hospital, broke through the flooring and carried nine beds with patients in them into the room beneath. For a time the excitement in and around the hospital was most intense, and the wildest sort of rumors were afloat, some having it that a dozen persons had been killed. As quickly as possible the work of clearing away the wreckage was commenced and it was soon found that nobody had been killed. The nine occupants of the beds were extricated alive but badly injured.

Marriages Unrecorded.

Milwaukee, March 26.—Mrs. Albert W. Peake of South Bend, Ind., who was married here in 1892, began an inquiry through an attorney to get proof of her marriage, and it developed that Justice Harrington, now dead, had failed to record 170 certificates of marriages he had performed, and a doubt has arisen as to their legality. The weddings were performed in 1892 and during the world's fair, when hundreds of people came to Milwaukee to be married. The justices and preachers are obliged to pay a small fee to record the marriages, and it seems that a number of clergymen have also been neglectful of this duty.

Artistic Diamond Swindler.

Toronto, March 26.—J. Coleman, one of the most accomplished and successful diamon swindlers on the continent, was caught to-day at St. Mary's, Ont., and brought to this city. He swindled Atlanta, Ga., jewelers out of $31,000 by ordering diamonds and not paying for them, and also fleeced those of Macon, Augusta, Charleston and Savannah.

For Election Frauds.

New York, March 26.—Last night twelve men were arrested and taken to police headquarters on warrants issued on the indictments found by the grand jury and returned to Justice Ingraham, in the court of oyer and terminer. The men arrested were all elected inspectors at the last election. They gave bail.

Paper Unfit for the Mails.

Butte, Mont., March 26.—Joseph P. Wenrich, publisher of the Sunday Mercury, a sensational paper in this city, was sentenced to thirty days in jail and fined $100 and costs in the United States court here to-day for using the mails for unlawful purposes sending the sheet through it.

Was Not Lynched.

Nashville, March 26. — A rigid investigation made of the reported lynching of a negro woman near Lynchburg, this state, shows that the report was a malicious fabrication, without the slightest basis of truth. There was no lynching and no attempt at lynching, and the woman was not interfered with.

Colored Editor in Jail.

Washington, March 26.—W. Calvin Chase, the negro editor convicted of libeling C. H. J. Taylor, recorder of deeds of the District of Columbia, was sentenced to ninety days in jail today.

Japanese Land.

Yokohama, March 26.—It is stated that on Thursday last the Japanese occupied Fisher island, one of the Pescadore group. Sailors were landed on the coast and these were followed by troops. The Chinese made no opposition.

Drummers Shut Out.

Little Rock, Ark., March 26.—Every city on the line of railroads in this state except Little Rock to-day quarantined against all commercial travelers on account of smallpox.

The prosecution in the Ives impeachment case is having its innings before the judiciary committee, but not making very rapid strides in the direction of impeachment. Their labors so far have been more in the line of persecution than prosecution, and only the bum element of the county and a few disgruntaled politicians and a few black sheep are in sympathy with them.—McIntosh Times.

It was reported yesterday in the corridors, near the carefully guarded doors of the house inquiry committee which has been nearly two weeks on the investigation, that the case of Judge Ives which is nearing an end, has not developed the sensational features promised. it is said that the showing pro and con is about a stand-off, and that while errors by the Judge' and perhaps arbitrary rulings in certain prosecutions have been shown and admitted nothing warranting anything like impeachment proceedings have been substantiated.

The bill which provides for the establishment of two experimental farms one in the Red River Valley and one in Central Minnesota was recommended to pass in committee of the whole in the house on Wednesday, This is a measure partly in the interest of the agricultural portion of the state and as such should be made a law without opposition' The foundation of Minnesota prosperity s i the successful cultivation of its vast agricultural region and anything that will bring about the production of better and more profitable crops will redound to the interest of the whole state, These experimental farms will be a considerable means to this end and for that reason would be a good investment,—Crookston Times.

President Hill has returned to St. Paul from his European trip and says that the condicions in England are as bad or worse than here, particularly the manufacturing and landed interests Cotton spinners cannot compete with Japan, and live stock feeders are handicapped in competing with Australia by the improved facilities for preserving meats in transit, This country he thinks will not reach the former high water mark of prosperity for some time, and the two conditions precedent to prosperity are a return of the unemployed of the cities to the far..., and a scaling down of wages and land values. The movement from the industral cities to the farming land in the Northwest, he thinks, is evident by a great demand for railroad lands and a movement to take up homesteads on government lands The movement is rapidly increasing, and the result is that the newer portions of the country rapidly being settled up.

AN URGENT APPEAL.

Populists, You Must Support Your Committee if You Desire Victory.

The national committee, at its recent meeting in St. Louis, declared in favor of making an aggressive educational campaign, which from now until the meeting of the next national convention is imperative if we wish to add new recruits and prevent our forces from relapsing into inactivity. Virginia, Kentucky, Mississippi, Ohio, Iowa, Utah, New Mexico and Arizona hold state elections this year. Nothing ought to be left undone to make a vigorous campaign and win a victory in these states. A victory or healthy increase in our vote in these states this year will add much prestige to our campaign in 1896. The greater portion of this work will fall upon the undersigned. We stand ready to do our duty to the fullest extent if the Populists of the United States will respond to the following resolutions, adopted by the national committee:

Resolved, That we ask and request that every Populist member of state legislatures and county and local offices pledge to contribute $1, $2 or more per month, as their income may permit, to support the national committee.

Resolved, That we kindly and respectfully request that those Populists who can afford to do so and have the cause at heart pledge and contribute to the national committee $1, $2, $5, $10 or more per month, as their ability to give may permit, to be paid on the 1st of each month.

We request that the treasurer keep a list of those pledging a definite sum per month, notify each on the 1st day of each month, with the request that they remit same.

Resolved, That we earnestly ask and request all officers of People's Party clubs, legions, members of county and local committees, also all others, to act as a committee of one to take up collections among the Populists in their respective localities for 5 and 10 cent contributions. We request that they call on every person who voted our ticket or who has our cause at heart and have them contribute from 5 cents and upward and forward the same to M. C. Rankin, Terre Haute, Ind.

Resolved, That all moneys contributed from all sources be paid to M. C. Rankin, Terre Haute, Ind., treasurer of national committee.

But few realize the great task before us and the meager financial support we have received in the past. So far not a member of the national committee has ever received $1 for time or personal expenses while engaged in the work. We can do more with $1 between campaigns toward educating the people than with $5 or $10 during the campaign. If we remain inactive, it will require five times as much work and money to get things in shape in 1896 than if we make an aggressive fight from now until then.

There ought to be at least one Populist in each county in the United States who can afford to pledge and contribute $1 per month or who can take it upon himself to collect $1 per month from the Populists in his county.

With this amount the committee can make an aggressive campaign and organize for the great contest in 1896. This is a contest of the people, for the people and by the people, and every Populist ought to do something toward advancing the cause.

We ask that those who have been elected to state legislatures and county and local offices to pledge and contribute $1 or more per month. This is not asking too much when we consider that the purchasing power of the dollar has increased fully 50 per cent since 1892, and all salaries in the same proportion, and that thousands of men and women have given as much time and money toward the upbuilding of our party without ever asking or expecting anything in return as those who have been elected to high positions.

We earnestly ask those who have our cause at heart and are able to pledge and contribute a definite sum to be paid on the first day of each month to do so. We believe there are enough men among the 2,000,000 Populists who can afford to give without injury to themselves $1, $2, $5 or more per month until the meeting of the next national convention to enable the committee to make an aggressive campaign.

We request that every Populist in the United States resolve himself into a committee of one, call upon every Populist in his locality for 5 and 10 cent contributions and forward same to the national treasurer.

We believe that every Populist can and ought to contribute 5 cents and upward to restore this government to the people. If the Populists of the United States will assist us with funds, the committee will reopen headquarters, organize and educate to make a winning fight in 1896, but before we can do anything we must be assured that we can secure enough funds so that we will not be compelled to close in the middle of our work.

H. E. TAUBENECK, Chairman.
M. C. RANKIN, Treasurer.
J. H. TURNER, Secretary.
L. J. MCPARLIN, Secretary.

What the Third Party Is.

The predominance of the few against the many is becoming more and more apparent. The tribunals of the law are practically failures. Ever since the war the people have been trying to work out a release from the domination of the old parties, which have proved themselves failures. Neither of them have given the relief to the people which they promised. The present third party, composed of farmers, professional men, workmen and small capitalists, is but a continuation of the Workingmen's party which in 1870 nominated Wendell Phillips for the presidency. The third party is a movement the aim of which is the abolition of monopoly.—Henry D. Lloyd.

The Republic.

Call ye men free when man may say to man,
"Naught shalt thou do that favors not my push;"
When man may say to man, "Thou shalt not live Except upon such terms as I may give;"
When he may reap the fruits of others' toil
And hold dominion o'er the common soil,
And through the argument of liberty
Transform men's freedom into tyranny,
When man, to satisfy his worldly greed,
May prostitute the nation's vital need
And paralyze the industries of life,
Unmindful of resultant dearth and strife,
Unmindful of the hungered and oppressed,
And holding it unlawful to protest?
Is this, then, liberty and are men free
When despotism such as this may be?

Call ye men free when, in a fertile land
Whose soil could well supply the world's demand,
Whose fields and granaries are stored with food
In wasteful, overflowing plenitude,
They starve and famish for the want of bread?
Yea, call for food in all the fearful dread
That marks the terrors of a famined race,
Where farms and earth are but a withered space?
Is this, then, liberty when men may cry
For food within their very reach and die?
Is this, then, liberty when men are robbed
Of that envivifying force that throbbed
Within the art'ries of the nation's life
When comfort and prosperity were rife?
Are such men free who starve and dare not live
When earth has boundless stores and life to give?

Call ye men free whose country's wealth must go
To meet the dictates of a foreign foe,
That, though in bloody conflict long subdued,
Still holds its conquerors in servitude,
And through its subtle power o'er the land
Enforces whatsoe'er it may demand?
Call ye men free who with their vast domain
Might well defy the world and all its gain
And force obedience through their strength and worth
From ev'ry land and nation of the earth?
Yea, call ye such men free who fall and groan
Beneath the bondage of an alien throne;
Who, taxed against their will, must ever strive
That idle holders of their bonds may thrive?
Yea, call ye such men free when they must toil
To purchase liberty from "freedom's soil?"

—Clifford Howard in Twentieth Century.

AN OBITUARY.

Dead year, upon whose bier I lean!
Dead year, whose sheeted features lie
Half formless in the falling snow!
You brought such joys, such sorrows keen,
Such mingled pain and ecstacy,
I cannot lightly let you go.
But pause awhile to shed a tear
That you should lie so low, old year.

How blithe you were when first we met!
A flying chorus round you sung
The snowdrops peeped to see you pass,
And where your hasty foot you set
Deep violets and field daisies hung
Their trembling blossoms on the grass,
And hope, with swiftly moving wing,
You brought to make eternal spring.

A grass green kirtle next you wore,
And gathered wild flowers in the wood.
Sweet odors all around you stole
Forth from the chalice that you bore.
Knee deep in tangled brakes you stood.
The red sun cast an aureole
About your golden head, old year,
And that glad vision brought me cheer.

Then, with a sheaf of ripened grain
Laid close against your heaving breast
And crowned with purple grapes you came.
I marked the brown and stubby plain,
I marked the forest's wavy crest,
With tufts and branches all aflame,
With every feature grown more dear,
I loved you daily more, old year.

At last the solemn winter laid
Its diamond crown upon your brow.
The icicles hung on the eaves,
And deep within the beechen glade
The bare trees in the blast did bow
Their heads all shorn of crisp brown leaves.
You taught me how old age might be Made grand by simple majesty.

Now, robed and silent for the tomb,
You lie before me still and white.
With burning tears I say "Goodby,"
And take from out the darkened room
The happy hopes that once were bright,
In guise of tender memory.
What most was precious cannot die,
Old year, although so low you lie.

—Curtis Hay in Youth's Companion.

Darwin.

In speaking of Darwin at Cornell university Professor Burt G. Wilder said:

"What monument to his memory could be more appropriate or lasting than the formation in all educational institutions of collections especially designed to exhibit the facts which he made significant and the ideas which his knowledge, his industry and his honesty have caused to underline the intelligent study of nature throughout the world? Such collections should include particularly series illustrating human peculiarities, not only as to the skeleton, but as to the brain, heart and other organs, human resemblance to mammals in general, features which unite man with the tailless apes and separate them all from the other mammals, transitory human organs and conditions which resemble the permanent organs and conditions of other mammals, especially apes; human anomalies resembling the normal structures of apes, anomalies and malformations affecting man and other vertebrates in a similar manner, apparently useless or detrimental organs or conditions."—New York Tribune.

Washington's Notion About the Senate.

Sir John Macdonald, the first prime minister of Canada, was fond of relating this story to illustrate the need of an upper house:

"Of what use is the senate?" asked Jefferson as he stood before the fire with a cup of tea in his hand, pouring the tea into the saucer.

"You have answered your own question," replied Washington.

"What do you mean?"

"Why do you pour that tea into the saucer?"

"To cool it."

"Even so," said Washington; "the senate is the saucer into which we pour legislation to cool."—Philadelphia Record.

Sir Charles Dilke.

Sir Charles Dilke lately astonished Paris by his prowess with the foils. Although in his fifty-fourth year, he carried everything before him, defeating several of the most celebrated maitres d'armes, who were simply staggered by his trick of changing his foil from hand to hand. For a quarter of a century scarcely a day has passed that the baronet has not devoted an hour to this branch of sport. He is likewise a splendid oarsman and is at home in the saddle, but he has a profound and un-English contempt for cricket, football and tennis.

A Dangerous Mistake.

Captain Forsyth, while conservator of forests in central India, had four spaniels—Quail, Snipe, Noll and Jess—over which he used to shoot quail and partridge. The spaniels were also famous ratters and on one occasion came near being "wiped out" by indulging their ruling passion.

The captain was shooting quail in a grainfield with his spaniels, when on a sudden they began to jump violently about, snapping at what seemed to be a large rat. But on going nearer the captain made out that it was a huge cobra, erect on his coil and striking right and left at the dogs.

Pelting off the dogs with clods of earth, the captain cut off the snake's head with a charge of shot and found that the reptile had been in the act of swallowing a rat. The hind legs and tail were protruding from his jaws, so that his repeated lunges at the dogs had been harmless.—Youth's Companion.

Editorial Perils In China.

A newspaper published in Peking is said to be the oldest in the world. It dates from a period 200 years prior to the Norman conquest of England. Naturally its prolonged existence in an autocratically governed country like China has been marked by many vicissitudes, not the least of which is the fact recently announced in its columns that during the 1,000 years of its existence 1,900 of its editors have been beheaded, or, roughly speaking, two per annum.—Peking Letter.

Peas and Oats as Farm Feed.

I have been feeding two heifers this winter (one a grade Ayrshire, the other a common blood) on rye, peas, and oats cut the last of June while the grain was in an immature state, and four quarts of carrots each night and morning. They furnished three quarts of milk a day for customers and made eight pounds of butter per week. They kept up a steady flow of milk through the cold weather and have not fallen off in flesh. This crop answers the purpose of both hay and grain and requires but half the season to obtain it, leaving the land the other half to grow another crop.—R. H. Mack, Saratoga, Co., N. Y.

AN ALARMING STATEMENT CONCERNING WOMEN.

HOW BAD HABITS ARE FORMED.

The New York Tribune says: "The habit of taking 'headache powders' is increasing to an alarming extent among a great number of women throughout the country. These powders as their name indicates, are claimed by the manufacturers to be a positive and speedy cure for any form of headache. In many cases their chief ingredient is morphine, opium, cocaine or some other equally injurious drug having a tendency to deaden pain. The habit of taking them is easily formed, but almost impossible to shake off. Women usually begin taking them to relieve a raging headache and soon resort to the powder to alleviate any little pain or ache they may be subjected to, and finally like the morphine or opium fiend, get into the habit of taking them regularly, imagining that they are in pain if they happen to miss their regular dose."

In nine cases out of ten, the trouble is in the stomach and liver. Take a simple laxative and liver tonic and remove the offending matter which deranges the stomach and causes the headache. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets are composed entirely of the purest, concentrated, vegetable extracts. One Pellet is a dose; sugar-coated, easily swallowed; once used, always in favor. They positively cure sick headache and remove the disposition to it.

Mr. E. Vargason, of Otter Lake, Lapeer Co., Mich., writes: "I not infrequently have an attack of the headache. It usually comes on in the forenoon. At my dinner I eat my regular meal, and take one or two of Doctor Pierce's Pleasant Pellets immediately after, and in the course of an hour my headache is cured and no bad effects. I feel better every way for having taken them—not worse, as is usual after taking other kinds of pills. 'Pleasant Pellets' are worth more than their weight in gold, if for nothing else than to cure headache."

HE WAS ANSWERED.

By Mary Grace Halpine.

Philip Austin and Julius Fitzaddle sat upon the back portico of the hotel, where they both boarding, one pleasant September evening. One was reading, the other smoking, their usual and most congenial occupation at that hour.

The latter sat with his feet upon the railing, and his chair tipped back, watching with half-shut eyes the cloud of smoke that circled above his head.

Fitzaddle was one of those happy individuals who are always on excellent terms with themselves and the self-complacent smile upon his face indicated that his thoughts were of a very agreeable and flattering nature.

"I say, Phil, what d'ye think of the old Larcom place?"

"In what respect?" inquired the individual addressed, raising his eyes from his book.

"Why, in respect to a family residence for myself and Mrs. Fitzaddle, that is to be," responded Julius, stroking his mustache with a superlatively conceited air.

"I think as I always have thought that it is a delightful place But I didn't know that it was for sale."

"Nor I. But I shouldn't wonder if I lived there, for all that."

Philip stared at his companion for a moment, and then resumed his book, evidently not considering the subject worth further discussion.

But this did not suit Fitzaddle, whose mind was burdened with some important secret that he was anxious to disclose.

"I say, Phil," he resumed, evidently too full of himself to remain quiet or let any one else be, "this getting married is rather ticklish business, isn't it, now? Giving up one's bachelor privileges, the admiration of the pretty girls, and all that sort of thing? But, then, a fellow's got to be married some time. What d'ye say to being groomsman?"

Philip laid down his book, well knowing that Fitzaddle would give him no peace until he had heard him through.

"But you haven't told me yet the fortunate lady's name," he said smiling.

"Can't you guess?" said Fitzaddle, simpering. "The charming Flora Larcom, to be sure."

Philip Austin looked thunderstruck.

"Do you mean to say that you have proposed to, and been accepted by Miss Larcom?"

"Well, no, not exactly. That is to say, I haven't gone through the form yet. I have had no opportunity since—Ahem! But I know just as well what her reply will be as though I had."

Philip looked as if he hardly knew whether to laugh or be angry.

"Perhaps Miss Larcom proposed to you?" he said dryly.

"Well, no, not exactly that, either. The dear girl has confessed, though not to me, the—aw—too flattering estimation in which she holds me."

Philip Austin started to his feet, looking at the little coxcomb as though he would like to fling him over the railing into the garden beneath, which he could easily have done.

"What do you mean by telling such nonsense as that?" he said angrily.

"It's not nonsense at all," retorted Fitzaddle, sulkily. "It's the truth; and you needn't get so mad because it cuts you out. I knew that you were sort of smitten in that quarter! but I don't know that the charming creature is so desperately in love with me that she has neither ears nor eyes for any one else."

"What makes you think that she is so desperately in love with you, as you call it?"

"Because I heard her tell Augusta Jones so, in just so many words. I don't mind telling you, Phil, the way I happened to find out," added Fitzaddle, dropping his voice to a low, confidential tone. "You see, yesterday I strolled down to Mr. Jones' orchard. Hearing the sound of girls laughing, I looked through the hedge, and saw Flora and Augusta sitting under a tree eating apples. Augusta was naming Flora's destined husband, and she tried to make the seeds spell your name; but it was no go. Then she tried mine and they just spelled it. Then Augusta declared that I was to be Flora's husband; and Flora said that it was too much to hope for, confessing that she was desperately in love with me, but she was afraid that I could never be brought to the point of proposing. Sweet girl, she looked so charming as she said this, with her smiles, dimples, and blushes, that, had she been alone, I should have rushed forward and assured her that her fears were groundless; but to-night I will tell her how entirely her love is returned. Don't you envy me, my dear fellow? By Jove! such eyes! such complexion! And to think it's all to mine for the asking!"

And giving his sandy mustache a still more "killink twist," Julius Fitzaddle strutted down the street, swinging his little bamboo cane in the air, and evidently enjoying in anticipation the triumph and happiness that awaited him.

Half an hour later he was in the presence of his charmer.

"My dear Miss Larcom—Flora; if you will let me call you so," lisped Fitzaddle, laying his hand on that portion of his vest where the heart is, or is supposed to be, "the feelings that fill my bursting bosom are—are—"

Here Fitzaddle forgot what came next in the pretty little speech he had conned over so many times, and was brought to a stand.

"That is to say," he resumed, with a desperate effort taking courage from the thought of the favorable response that was sure to be his, "the bursting feelings that fill my bosom are—are too numerous to mention."

In his effort to look languishing, Fitzaddle had rolled up his eyes and so contorted his features as to give him the appearance of a man either just going into a fit or coming out of it.

Miss Larcom arose to her feet in alarm.

Entirely mistaking this movement, Fitzaddle popped down upon his knees at her feet.

"Adorable creature, the sweet confession of your love has made me the happiest of men."

"The confession of my love?" repeated Flora, stepping back and regarding the kneeling man with a look of unutterable astonishment.

"Yes, dear one; and which I was so fortunate as to overhear when you were in the orchard yesterday. Know that it is fully returned; and I have come to beg that you will name the happy day that will make you all my own."

Miss Larcom suddenly put her handkerchief to her face, probably to hide her blushes or the blissful emotion called forth by this avowal. When she removed it her mouth was dimpling with smiles and her eyes dancing with merriment.

"I think I understand you, Mr. Fitzaddle; you seem, in this instance, to have reversed the old adage, 'that listeners never hear any good of themselves.' But there is uncle's step in the hall, and I have no time to say more. Come to-morrow evening about the same hour, and you shall have your answer."

Half an hour later Philip Austin was in the same room, listening to Flora's laughing account of the above mentioned visit.

"The long-eared donkey!" he exclaimed, as she concluded; "he told me the same story. Only a sound pummeling will take the conceit out of him, and I have half a mind to give him one."

"No, Philip," said Flora, "leave him to me. I told him to come for his answer to-morrow evening and which, I think, will be more effectual in taking the conceit out of him, as you call it, and the process you mention."

Philip kissed the sweet lips that were in such tempting proximity to his own.

"I shouldn't wonder if you were right, darling. Any way, I think that it will be an answer satisfactory to me!"

When Fitzaddle reached Mr. Larcom's the next evening, he was shown into the back parlor; the folding doors between it and the front parlor being closed—a rather unusual circumstance.

He found, to his surprise, quite a number of people assembled, all of them discussing some wedding, in which they seemed to be deeply interested.

"Whose wedding?" he inquired of an acquaintance, who accosted him.

"Miss Larcom's, to be sure," said the individual addressed, with a look of surprise.

Fitzaddle's heart fluttered. The idea that Flora could marry any one else never entered his silly brain. No; it was a joyful surprise that she had planned for him. If he had only thought to have worn his light-colored vest and white gloves!

As he stood wondering if there would not be time for him to slip back to the hotel and supply the omission, the folding doors were opened, disclosing a little group at the farther end of the room, in the center of which stood Philip Austin and Flora Larcom; the pure, spotless robes of the latter, the soft, filmy vail that floated around the form, giving a new and solemn beauty to the sweet young face.

The group around them parted and stood upon either side, as a grave-looking man in black stepped forward.

The brief, but impressive ceremony over, friends pressed eagerly forward to congratulate the happy pair, but Fitzaddle was not among them; he stood motionless, too much bewildered and taken by surprise to know whether he was awake or dreaming.

"'Pon my word, I don't understand it," he said as Philip, pitying the forlorn appearance of the little coxcomb, came forward and spoke to him; "she declared she loved me, and marries you?"

"My dear fellow," said Philip, too happy to feel other than amused at this exhibition of mental obtuseness, "don't you know that women and dreams always go by contraries? When they say one thing they always mean another."

And with this explanation Fitzaddle was obliged to content himself.

HOME LOVING ANIMALS.

In a Wild State They Still Cling to Some Particular Spot.

Most wild animals are much more local in their habits than we imagine; that is, they become attached to some especial small range of country, to which they confine themselves at certain seasons of the year. We can see the same thing in our domestic stock on the range. A bunch of horses will live for months in some little set of ravines, feeding over the same ground day in and day out, until some change in the weather leads them to remove to another locality. The same is true of range cattle, though they wander more than horses. Though all species of our western game wholly change their range in spring and autumn, yet after they have settled down on their summer or winter ranges, the area that they cover is not extensive. At certain hours of the day they go to water; at a particular time they will be found lying down usually in the same place, or feeding in the same neighborhood. The hunter established in one locality, who is fairly observant, who has time to familiarize himself with a particular range of country and its wild inhabitants and who does not wantonly disturb them, will learn after a time just where to look for small groups of the various species. On a horse ranch, where in the past, I have spent much time, I came to know exactly where to go if I wished to find two or three little companies of mule-deer or of antelope, and at last believed that I could recognize the different individuals, of the various groups.

In the same way I know certain valleys, plateaus or ridges where I can be quite sure of finding a little bunch of mountain sheep, known to be the same by the number and ages of its members. I have watched for several successive days the same family of white goats feeding on the mountain sides above my camps, and can go to certain rough slopes of slide rock and precipice where these animals are always to be found. That elk and moose have essentially the same habit, I have no doubt, although I have not been able to verify my belief by observation in the case of these species. The caribou is said to be more of a wanderer.

In the National Park there are believed to be now about 200 buffalo, 15,000 to 20,000 elk, 500 antelope and an unknown number of moose deer, mountain sheep and bears. But there is no reason why there should not be many, other such breeding centers, where big game should be preserved and very greatly increase.—Harper's Weekly.

A Dog's Response to a Taunt.

A dog story has come to the writer's ears, which, though not within his personal knowledge is vouched for to him in an entirely trustworthy way. A certain dog, which was growing old, was in a barn one day with his master. The two were up on a haymow from which a sloping ladder led down to the barn floor. The master walked down the ladder, but the dog went around by another way. When the dog reached the barn door his master began to say tauntingly: "Poor old fellow! Daren't walk down the ladder any more! Whereupon the dog, with a quick glance at his master, walked clear up the ladder to the top and then turned around and walked down it again. The proceeding looked very much like a deliberate demonstration on the dog's part, to his master, that he was still capable of walking up and down a slanting ladder. Did the dog understand the taunt, or did he merely catch the words "down the ladder," and take the utterance for a command, which he dutifully proceeded to obey? No one will ever know, probably since the dog himself can give no account of the matter.—Boston Transcript.

The new boy had been an inmate of the politician's family for about two weeks, and every day of that time, almost, had been devoted in part to selecting a name for the baby. Everybody who has had experience in that department of human existence knows the difficulties and dangers of this trying ordeal, and the politician was no exception. His wife was a patriotic woman, and insisted that the boy should be named George Washington.

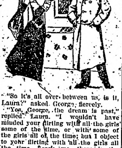
"Oh, give him some other name," begged the father.

"Why," she exclaimed "you could not have a better name than that."

"It's too good."

"Not for my baby," she replied, folding the little one proudly and fondly to her bosom.

"But it is, my dear," urged the father. "He's going to be a politician as his father and grandfather were before him and we oughtn't to handicap him with a name like that. He can't live up to it, dear. He can't; I know he can't. I've been in the business and I know what I'm talking about. So does the baby's grandpa, and that youngster won't be at it a year before he can't look a little hatchet in the face to save his life. Name him something else, dear," he pleaded, "if you don't want to ruin his future forever."—Detroit Free Press



"So it's all over between us, is it, Laura?" asked George, fiercely.

"Yes, George, the dream is past," replied Laura. "I wouldn't have minded your flirting with all the girls some of the time, or with some of the girls all of the time; but I object to your flirting with all the girls all the time. Leave me, there is the door!"

He Knew His Business.

"St. Louis isn't much on the world's fairs and things of that sort," said Joseph Goosman of that city yesterday, "but when it comes to a comparison of our policemen, especially on the score of intelligence, we are not afraid of all the rest of the world. A friend of mine had an experience in this line the other night which proves my contention. When he is especially hard worked my friend is quite likely to walk in his sleep, and on the occasion referred to a police officer found him meandering up and down the street, and mercury hovering about zero, with nothing on but his nightshirt. The policeman woke him up, escorted him to his home, and ordered him to dress.

"'Why, I am going back to bed,' said my friend.

"'Oh, no, you're not,' said the officer, 'you're going down to the lock-up with me.'

"'You aren't going to put me in jail, are you,' queried my friend anxiously. 'Why, I'm a somnambulist, you know.'

"'I don't give a —— what church you belong to,' profanely replied the intelligent member of the finest, 'you ain't going to prance around the streets of this town in your shirt-tails. So you get into your clothes and come along.'"—Chicago Times.

A Narrow Escape.

The reverend doctor is "a little round, fat, oily man of God" but he is blessed with a brain and a laugh far greater than most men, and he never hesitates to tell a joke, even though it be "one on him." The last time he met the Saunterer he had been having trouble with the steam boiler of his house, and had sent for a plumber to locate the difficulty.

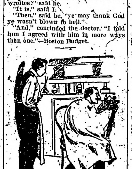
"The plumber came," said the doctor, "and proved to be a burly Irishman, twinkling all over from the sole of his feet to the top of his carrot pate. I sent him down stairs, and in my study, just over the boiler, by the way, awaited the result of his investigations. In about ten minutes he reappeared, looking somewhat disturbed.

"'Is this the place where ye sits and wroites?' said he.

"'It is,' said I.

"'Then,' said he, 'ye may thank God ye wasn't blown to hell.'

"And," concluded the doctor, "I told him I agreed with him in more ways than one."—Boston Budget.



Customer (getting his hair cut)—Didn't you nip off a piece of the ear then?

Barber (reassuringly)—Yes, sir, a small piece; but not enough to affect the hearin', sir.

The Word and the Deed.

Slothful Snawley—Didn't I tell yer that if yer went up an' axed fer a drink o' whisky at old Kerhel Bluegrass' house, you'd get 'er? Great stuff, too!

Saturated Sam (musingly)—Yes; dat was fine licker; but I don't jest know wot ter make of his words w'en I axed 'im fer it.

Slothful Snawley—Why, wot did 'e say?

Saturated Sam—He looked at me a minnit and said dat it was a request dat he could not refuse, as he always b'lieved dat whisky was good fer both man and beast.

Just Like the Real Thing.

Johnnie—Oh, blank such a dinner as this!

Papa—You, John! what do you mean, sir, by swearing sir?

Johnnie—That's all right, papa. Sis and I are playing keeping house and I'm the husband.—Judge.

The Secret of Longevity.

Reporter—How is it, my friend, that you have attained the remarkable age of 104?

Centenarian—I never worked before breakfast, sir.

Reporter—Indeed; then this is a fact worth remembering.

Centenarian—But there is another little fact that I forgot to mention.

Reporter—What is it?

Centenarian—I never worked after breakfast either.

Knew What He Wanted.

Kind Gentleman—That boy just hit you, did he?

Small Boy—Yes, he did.

Kind Gentleman—Well, now, why don't you heap coals of fire on his head, like a good boy?

Small Boy—Do good boys do that?

Kind Gentleman—Yes, indeed, all boys.

Small Boy—Well, I guess I must be dead wicked then, 'cause I don't want to burn the chump to death, I just want to punch his head.—Life.

Why He Was Wrong.

Weary Whiskers—I sees here by dis paper dat only 8 per cent of der per-fesh is married. I'd think dat, wot wid der wimmin advancing so dese days, dey'd be more married gents driven to de road.

Happy Hours—Naw! Ain't der wimmin every day going inter more wider fields of work? Wot, den, does a feller want to endure der discomforts of trav'lin' if he's got a good home, a strong wife an' new ways openin' every day fer her to make der livin'?

A Fine Distinction.

"There is too much verbal talk about this fight," said a man to a pugilist.

"Verbal talk?" sneered the bruiser, "you think you understand the English language, don't you?"

"I do, and that is why I say there has been too much verbal talk. Put up some cash, and let the money talk."—Puck.

Preparing for Argument.

"Hello, Hakenton," said one of the statesmen in the house of representatives as he picked up from his neighbor's desk four or five dictionaries of invectives and slang. "I see you're studying philology."

"Not exactly," said his neighbor, burying himself still further in a treatise on the history of billingsgate. "I'm merely preparing for my debate on the financial question."—Chicago Record.

"You told me the parrot you sold me the other day could repeat everything it heard. Rubbish! Preach to it as I will, it remains as dumb as a fish."

"It is quite true I told you it would repeat everything it heard; but then it hears nothing; it is as deaf as a post."

They Were Used to It.

"How," asked the captain of the train robbers, "did you manage to go through so many passengers alone?"

"I had only," rejoined the ordinary brigand, "to carry a whisk-broom in my hand, and they suspected nothing."—Puck.

No Voice in It.

Mrs. Meanitall—Then you look upon marriage merely as a business partnership?

Mr. Meanitall—I do, indeed. And the husband should be the silent partner.

Her Crime.

Maud—I see that Flora Findesiecle has been expelled from the New Woman's club.

Marie—What for.

Maude—For conduct unbecoming a gentleman.

A Game of Hunt the Hare.

Cholley (gleefully)—Why, it's taken you five minutes longer to shave me than you took for Beardsley.

Barber (apologetically)—Well, you see, I had to hunt for your whisker.

Expensive.

Dicker—Have you got twenty-five you don't have to have?

Ticker—What's the matter; broke?

Dicker—Yep; wife kissed me good-by before I left home this morning.

Woman's Idea of It.

He—I wonder why it is required of every man to be born again?

She—Out of fairness to him. It gives him a chance of being born a girl next time.

A Sad Case.

Coroner—What was the dead girl's name? Do any of you know?

Bystander—Please, sir, it was Sweet Marie.

Coroner—Case of justifiable suicide.

Rich Red Blood

In the body of an adult person there are about 18 pounds of blood.

The blood has as its most important elements, small round corpuscles, red and white, in proportion of about 300 red to 1 white one.

If the number of red corpuscles becomes diminished and the white ones increased the blood is impure, thin, lacking in the nutrition necessary to sustain the health and nerve strength of the body.

Then That Tired Feeling, Nervousness, Scrofula, Salt Rheum, or others of the long train of ills, according to the temperament and disposition, attack the victim.

The only permanent remedy is found in a reliable blood medicine like Hood's Sarsaparilla, which acts upon the red corpuscles, enriching them and increasing their number. It thus restores the vital fluid to healthy condition, expels all impurity, cures Nervousness, That Tired Feeling, Scrofula and all other diseases arising from or promoted by low state of the blood.

That these statements are true we prove not by our own statements; but by what thousands of perfectly reliable people say about Hood's Sarsaparilla. Read the testimonial in the next column from a beloved clergyman. Then take

"In view of the benefit I have had from Hood's Sarsaparilla I wish to give the following testimonial. I have several times been badly

Poisoned With Creeping Ivy.

As the old school of medicine simply tried to remove the symptoms instead of the sources of them, much of the poison was left in my system to appear in an itching humor on my body with every violent exertion in warm weather. At all times there were more or less indications of poison in my blood, up to a year ago last winter, when on my body. I then purchased a bottle of Hood's Sarsaparilla, and after using that and a half of another bottle, the sores and humor disappeared. I attended the Christian Endeavor Convention in Montreal and also visited the World's Fair in the hottest weather of the summer. Was on the go all the time, but of the burning and itching sensation which had marred every previous summer's outing. I have reason, therefore, to be enthusiastic in my praises of Hood's Sarsaparilla." Samuel S. Schnell, pastor of Free Baptist Church, Apalachin, N. Y.

The readers of this paper will be pleased to learn that there is at least one dreaded disease that science has been able to cure in all its stages, and that is Catarrh. Hall's Catarrh Cure is the only positive cure known to the medical fraternity. Catarrh being a constitutional disease, requires a constitutional treatment. Hall's Catarrh Cure is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system, thereby destroying the foundation of the disease, and giving the patient strength by building up the constitution and assisting nature in doing its work. The proprietors have so much faith in its curative powers, that they offer One Hundred Dollars for any case that it fails to cure. Send for list of testimonials.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

WORK OF THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings in the Senate and House, Comprising a Brief Summary of the Week's Business.

St. Paul, March 28. — Senator Johnson of Douglas presided over the morning session of the senate committee of the whole. The first bill to cause debate was S. F. No. 50, Senator Larson's bill, to put private banks under the supervision of the bank examiner. Senator Wyman secured an amendment to the bill by striking out section 2, which provides certain days in which reports should be made. He thought the banks should not know on what days reports would be called for. The bill was then amended to take effect Jan. 1, 1896, instead of after its passage and approval.

When Senator Roverud called up his resolution which denied the lobbyists the right to intrude in the senate chamber, it was opposed vigorously and voted down by a vote of 17 to 16, as follows:

For—Day, Greer, Hanna, Heneman, Knatvold, Lloyd, Masterman, Miller, Peterson, Pottgeiser, Roverud, Sperry, Seveningson, Theden, Thorpe, Wing—16.

Aagainst—Allen, Cronkhite, Hansen, Howard, Johnson, A. G.; Johnson, W. E.; Keller, Morgan, Ozmun, Potter, Rindal, Sheehan, Smith, Stebbins, Stevens, Wyman, Yale—17.

Senator Allen presented a bill relating to the due observance of Memorial day that will interest all citizens if it becomes a law, since it will regulate what sports may be practiced.

All gaming, horse racing, bicycle racing, boat racing, bicycle tournaments, base ball games, foot ball games or other public sports or shows, previous to the hour of 5 o'clock in the afternoon of any 30th day of May, commonly Memorial day, are prohibited. Any violation of the provisions of the act is a misdemeanor punishable by fine not less than $10 nor more than $100, or by imprisonment in a county jail not less than ten days, and not exceeding thirty days, or by both.

In the House.

The house kept up its reputation for hard work, and at the present rate will be even with the boards at the close of the session. During the afternoon in committee of the whole, Mr. Staples, who was in the chair, pushed business, and one fourth of the bills on general orders were disposed of. There were two interesting debates, one on Mr. Mellicke's freedom of traffic bill and the other on Mr. Sander's to prevent the commitment of detention of persons charged with crime in any institution not under the direct control of public officials. The latter was recommended to pass.

The judiciary committee handed in a report on seventy-five bills. Of these twenty-eight were recommended to pass, nineteen to pass as amended, twenty-two to be indefinitely postponed, three to be referred to other committees, one to go on general orders without recommendation and two were substituted by bills prepared by the committee. Of the bills reported back twenty-three were senate and fifty-two house files. As many of the members had gone to Taylors Falls, the prison labor bills, which were a special order for 2 p. m., were laid over.

St. Paul, March 29. — The senate spent most of the day in passing bills upon the calendar, which involved many roll calls. Several of the bills caused debate, a rather unusual thing when bills have passed through the committee of the whole. The bill productive of the most discussion was Senator Cole's proposed distribution of a portion of the gross earnings tax by giving 5 cents an acre to each county containing unoccupied railroad lands. At the end of the debate the bill was referred to the finance committee.

H. F. No. 338—To require the publication of the annual statement of receipts and disbursements of incorporated villages, towns, boroughs—caused debate. Senator Greer started the fight against the bill, stating that it was a job in the interest of country papers. Other senators followed in the same line. Senators Miller, Fuller, Day and others insisted that the publication of the financial condition of villages and towns was a matter in which every citizen was interested. The bill was lost, the vote being 18 to 25, several of its friends changing to no in order to be in position to move a reconsideration.

Bills Passed—To amend chapter 23, General Laws of 1893, defining what shall constitute a newspaper for publication of laws of the state and legal notices, and to legalize publications heretofore made.

To change the name of the Minnesota state reform school to state training school for boys and girls, and to consolidate the various acts relating thereto.

Ozmun—To improve the civil service of the State of Minnesota and the cities thereof, and to regulate the same.

Johnson, W. E.—To amend chapter 131, General Laws 1891, relating to building, loan and savings associations doing a general business.

Theden—To amend chapter 200, General Laws 1889, the mechanics' lien law, by making such lien prior to an unrecorded prior mortgage.

Roverud — To define vagrancy and provide punishment therefor, and to authorize cities and incorporated villages to provide for the punishment of vagrants.

Cross—A bill for an act to allow villages to separate themselves from township government, etc.

Young—To amend section 14, chapter 88, general statutes 1878, relating to the appointment of attorneys in case of sickness, death, etc.

Spencer—To amend section 1, chapter 24, General Laws 1878, restricting hours of labor to ten in certain cases.

In the House

the question of prison labor was disposed of by the passage of the Schurmeier bill, which was amended to be employed and limiting the number of convicts engaged in any industry to 25 per cent of those confined in the institution. The detailed vote follows:

For—Ahlstrom, Barta, Baston, Boobar, Brevig, Cant, Chisholin, Dahl, Dale, De Laittre, Dingman, Douglas, Downs, Ellingsen, Feig, Ferris, Finney, Gerlach, Gibbs, Grondahl, Gunn, Hartsborn, Hendricks, Holman, Johns Jones; J. D.; Kendall, Knuteson, Leach, Lee, Lovejoy, Mellicke, Metcalf, McInnis, McKenney, Nash, Nelson, Nieman, O'Reilly, Post Reeves, Rice, Robbins, Robillard, Sander, Schroeder, Schurmeier, Sederberg, Smith, E. E.; Smith, J. M.; Tallman, Underwood, Warner, Wright, Zier, Mr. Speaker—57.

The Dahl bill providing for an additional judge for the Fourth judiciary district was taken from the table and passed by a vote of 60 to 22.

St. Paul, March 29.—The age of consent bill, raising the age to 18, was passed in the senate. The vote was:

Against—Iltis, Keller, McHale, Potter, Pottgeiser, and Roverud—6.

The bill making national building and loan associations subject to the usury laws of the state produced a repetition of the fight of Monday, when it came up on the calendar. The debate lasted for nearly an hour, and when the vote was taken the bill was defeated by an overwhelming majority.

The senate defeated Senator Larson's bill—S. F. No. 50—providing that the public examiner shall examine private banks and other institutions receiving deposits as well as state banks. The bill had a stormy passage in the committee of the whole, and when it came up for final passage there were only about eleven votes in its favor.

The defeat of Young's bill relating to the returns to the supreme court on appeal caused Senator Stevens to assert that among the well known members of the third house, which has been quite active this session, the agents of the "clerks of district courts association" have been quite prominent. They have caused the defeat of several minor bills much desired by the lawyer members of the legislature. The following, among other bills, passed:

To prevent the obstruction of public levees or wharfs on any navigable river within the state, intended to give the police authorities jurisdiction over house boats, etc.

Regulating the taxation of steam vessels, barge, boat, or other water craft; 30 cents per net registered ton is to be accepted in lieu of all other taxes.

Keller—A joint resolution relating to the holding of land by corporations contrary to law.

Barr—To provide for the payment of the value of property condemned and appropriated by municipal corporations, including the costs of such condemnation, out of the general funds of such corporations.

Stevens—To provide for the incorporation of companies designed to loan money to the indigent and defining the powers and liabilities of such companies.

Stevens—Relating to the allowance of the accounts of executors and administrators.

The work accomplished by the house was something remarkable. Three of the most important bills of the session were passed, and none of them had been previously discussed on the floor of the house. Both of the charter bills—the Howard omnibus bill and the Sheehan home rule bill—were passed without amendment and with practically no debate.

The Staples pine land bill was discussed at length, and several amendments proposed by the author were adopted. Some bad feeling was developed during the consideration of this bill, and the opposition did not want the bill in any form, and declined to offer any amendments to it.

In the senate Senator Spencer secured the passage of a joint resolution authorizing the appointment of four commissioners, who, acting with the governor, will represent Minnesota in a proposed conference with commissioners from Wisconsin. The object of the conference is to secure the annexation of Superior and make it a portion of Duluth. The commissioners will report to the next legislature the result of the conference. The legislature of Wisconsin will be notified of the above action and requested to appoint like commissioners with full powers to meet and act with the Minnesota commissioners.

Senator Barr introduced the women's suffrage bill in the senate, which is the same as the one passed the senate two years ago.

Senator Sevatson, by request, introduced a bill, S. F. 670, that will interest steam thresher owners. It provides that owners must secure a license from the county auditor before working in each county. If it is a non-resident owner he must secure a license from the state auditor. Before securing a license the applicant must file a bond for $500 to secure damages that may result from fire caused by the thresher.

Senator Lovejoy's bill to regulate the employment of children, with amendments; prohibits children under fourteen working at other hours than from 7 o'clock in the morning to 6 o'clock at night, was passed.

Bills Passed by the House.

The house put in nearly all the day introducing and passing bills. There were thirty new bills introduced and twenty-two passed.

Bills Passed—French —To amend laws relating to time of holding terms of court in the Eighth judicial district.

To amend section 1, chapter 33, Laws of 1893, relating to newspapers.

Stevens—Relative to criminal offenses committed by corporations.

Stevens—To amend section 4, chapter 205, of the General Laws of 1885, regulating employment bureaus.

Morgan—A joint resolution to regulate the mode of removal of letter carriers, postoffice clerks and railroad postal clerks.

Miller—To amend section 16, chapter 16, General Statutes of 1878, and providing for the taxation of bicycles as other vehicles are taxed.

McInnis—Authorizing reassessments for local improvements by cities.

Craig—Relating to the state experiment station and providing for two substations.

Martin—Relating to education and giving the normal school board the authority to fix salaries of employes.

Ferris—To regulate the use of pound nets in international waters.

Cant and Douglas—To encourage the payment of taxes for the year 1893 and prior years, reducing the penalty to 7 per cent.

Committee on taxes and tax laws—To amend section 1515, of Kelly's Statutes of Minnesota.

Downs—Relating to the transfer of the soldiers' relief fund.

Mansfield—Relating to liquor licenses and the disposition of license money.

Downs—To appropriate $30,000 for new buildings and a lighting plant at the soldiers' home.

McKenney—To legalize articles and acts of corporations.

Committee on Claims—Reimbursing contestants in election contests.

St. Paul, April 2.—It was the last day, under the constitution, for bills to be introduced without the permission of the governor. The senators have hitherto had little trouble in securing the coveted permission, but the intimation has gone forth this session that a change in the policy of the executive in this particular might be expected. Acting upon the hint, every effort was made to get the bills introduced, and fifty-three were read for the first time. Many of them are of some general interest, while some have been held back because their authors are not proud of them or else are not anxious for publicity and hope to escape notice.

The total number of bills introduced last session was 578. The last file number this session was 733, and, of course, other bills may appear during the remaining three weeks of the session.

Senator Howard introduced a bill, S. F. No. 718, to provide for a constitutional amendment repealing the recently adopted amendment to the constitution against special legislation, and restoring the provisions which existed before the recent change.

Senator Schaller introduced by request, a "one-seat, one-fare" street car bill, similar in its general provisions to one introduced in the legislature of 1891 by senator McMillan.

Senator Keller introduced a bill to reduce from $25 to $15 the exemption of wages from seizure by garnishment attachment, execution or other process.

The senate passed the bill relating to the taxation of vessel property; making it 3 cents per ton in lieu of all other taxes; amended to apply to vessels navigating international waters.

In the House.

The house record for attending to business was sustained. It being the last day for the introduction of bills a flood of new measures, which came in three installments, were read for the first time. There were in all fifty-seven bills introduced, and a careful examination may reveal several woodchucks.

During the intervals in the introduction of bills the house resolved itself into the committee of the whole and recommended thirteen bills to pass. Mr. Knuteson's anti-hanging bill was indefinitely postponed as the Zier bill had been several days before.

Mr. Douglas' bill, to require hunters from states where Minnesota hunters may not shoot without a license, to procure licenses at $25 per license before engaging in the pastime within this state, was passed under suspension of the rules.

A large batch of bills was introduced during the morning session and the house, in committee of the whole, recommended several bills for passage, including Mr. Dale's constitutional amendment prohibiting the appropriation of public funds to any corporation, association or any other purpose unless it be under the control of public officials. Three senate bills relating to the state public schools and dependent children were also recommended favorably. Senator Spencer's bill, to determine the boundary between St. Louis and Lake counties and Senator Stebbins' providing for a fourth hospital for the insane received the same recommendation.

The house concurred in the senate amendments to H. F. No. 632—McInnis—relating to a tonnage tax upon vessels on international waters.

Probably a Double Murder.

San Diego, Cal., April 2. — Deputy County Assessor L. D. Bailey of Julian and F. B. Brackett of this city are missing, and it is feared that they have been murdered. Brackett went out to collect taxes and had several hundred dollars in their possession. Their horses have arrived at Julian, where the gravest apprehensions exist.

Oxford Wins.

Putney, Eng., April 2.—Oxford won the fifty-seventh boat race between the crews representing the Universities of Oxford and Cambridge, crossing the line two lengths ahead.

A MURDER MYSTERY.

AN ATROCIOUS CRIME DISCOVERED IN NEW YORK.

The Dismembered Body of a Young Colored Woman, Wrapped in Pieces of Carpeting, Is Found in a Bank Area on a Prominent Street.

New York, April 2. — One of the most mysterious murders committed in this city since the mutilated body of old "Shakespeare" was found in a low resort near the East river front, for whose butchery the Algerian "Frenchy" is now serving a life sentence, was discovered shortly after 6 a. m. The victim in this case was a young colored woman whose dismembered body was found wrapped in pieces of carpeting and partially hidden from view in the area of the building of the New York Bank company on the southwest corner of Sixth avenue and Waverly place. How long the ghastly remains had been lying there is not known. As yet the police have no clue to the person or persons who deposited the body there. Immediately upon the discovery of the crime the police of the central office were notified and a half dozen of the best detectives were detailed to fathom the mystery if possible. The body was found at almost the same time by two men. One of these was Joseph Phillips, a young electrician, and the other, Patrolman Edward S. Kasmire, of the Mercer street station. The bundle in which the remains were found was bound at each end with pieces of clothes line, leaving the middle portion somewhat loose. Around her neck was tied in a double knot a long piece of cheese cloth. This had been tied so tightly that it had caused strangulation and had forced the tongue to protrude from the mouth. This had been tied across her breast with a strong piece of cord by means of slip-knot. Her legs had been cut off just above the knees and one of them lay on the top of the body, with its foot toward her head, while the other was found underneath the body. Both members had been hacked off with a sharp ax or a butcher's cleaver, pieces of ragged skin and flesh hanging from the dismembered legs. The only clothing the woman had on were a chemise and chemisette of white material. When these were removed a gaping wound, nine inches long, and which penetrated to the bone, were disclosed just above the right thigh. In the bundle there was found a piece of note paper. On this paper was a clot of blood, and written in pencil were these words, so far as they could be made out:

"March 23, Rahway, N. J. James (or Jane) E. Surindell, Rahway, N. J." Beneath was the word "Solomon" and also the word "Brother," while the word "ditto" was written between them.

It is the opinion of the police that the woman is a member of that class of colored women who live on streets running out of Sixth avenue and gain their livelihood as women of the town. They make no attempt to explain the motive for the crime. The police of the city sent to Rahway to find if any one of the name of Surindell, the name which appeared on the piece of note paper found with the body, lived in Rahway, N. J. No one of that name could be found in the town.

BEHEADED HIS SON.

Terrible Deed of a Man Whom Misfortune Had Made Insane.

Clinton, Iowa, April 2.—A horrible crime came to light to-day. Two children of August Swanson, a widower, went to the neighbors and said they could not wake their father up. A special policeman went to the house, burst the door to the upper room and found Albert, a boy aged seven, lying on the bed, his head completely severed from his body. The murderer had raised a window and jumped out and escaped. Swanson was a few years ago insane, and the death of his wife and lack of work had probably crazed him.

Nearly a Holocaust.

Milwaukee, April 2.—At 6 o'clock this morning an entire block in the suburb of Silver City, west of the city limits, was swept by fire and a dozen families made homeless. The principal losers are William Schultz, August Loetz, Herman Schroeder, Gustave Klugg, Gustave Zillman and August Siefert, whose dwellings were burned. Many of the people barely escaped in their night clothes. The Milwaukee fire department sent a chemical, but it was too late to be of service. The loss is placed at $15,000, about 75 per cent of which is covered by insurance.

Newspaper Man Dead.

Corning, N. Y., April 2. — Edward Bradford, Barnes, Southern correspondent at St. Louis of the Northwestern Miller, the leading trade journal published at Minneapolis, died in this city after a brief illness of typhoid fever. Mr. Barnes was twenty-eight years of age, graduated from Cornell in 1888, and one of the leading journalists in the United States. He was for a number of years identified with the Minneapolis Journal and Tribune and the St. Paul Pioneer Press. He narrowly escaped death in the Tribune fire a few years ago.

John W. Cary's Funeral.

Chicago, April 2. — Funeral ceremonies over the remains of the late John W. Cary, general counsel of the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul railway, were held at the family residence. The remains were taken to Milwaukee for burial.

He Stole Wheat.

Red Wing, Minn., April 2.—Z. G. Paulson, charged with stealing wheat from farmers' granaries, was arraigned before Judge Williston today, and pleaded guilty of petit larceny. Sentence was deferred.

For Plundering a Car.

Chamberlain, S. D., April 2.—Steve McDermaid has been bound over to appear before the next term of court in Davison county for breaking open and pilfering goods from a Milwaukee railroad car.

COLUMBUS OUTDONE.

Capt. Andrews' Log Reads Like a Romance of the Sea.

In a little book entitled "Columbus Outdone" Capt. William A. Andrews, who has acquired fame by crossing the Atlantic in small boats, and who is now in Baltimore arranging for another similar voyage, tells of his adventures in the little 14-foot boat in which he crossed from Atlantic City to Palos, Spain, in 1892. The voyage occupied sixty-nine days, including a stop at Azores islands.

During all of his four voyages he never tasted warm food. His "stores" consisted mainly of canned beef, condensed milk, ship biscuits, beef extract and canned beans. Nearly all his meals were eaten while he had one hand on the boat's tiller.

Alone on the ocean for weeks at a time, without sighting a vessel, he sailed day after day. Columbus himself would scarcely have ventured on such a trip. America's discoverer had three good-sized vessels, 150 men, and the best equipments of the times, and, in addition, the blessing of the church. Capt. Andrews had nothing but a coffin-shaped boat, fourteen feet long, a little store of provisions, an old quadrant, a compass and a chart. But through all his dangers and lonely hours Capt. Andrews' cheerfulness never deserted him.

"She looks like a coffin," said many who gazed at the little craft before she started. "So she does," replied her captain, with a grim smile, "and as I built her myself I will be my own undertaker if she sinks."

One week after leaving port, when the little old tub was leaking badly and death stared Capt. Andrews in the face, this entry was made in the log:

"No mail to-day; can't understand why my best girl don't drop me a line."

Another entry describes a bath the captain took and comments on the fact that "when you're traveling this way no bathing suit or bath tub is necessary."

One dark night a big sea nearly swamped the little craft, and this is how the log describes the event:

"I have just turned in. I have just turned out again. As soon as I closed my eyes a big sea came over and slapped me on the 'cocoanut.' As I bail her out I am singing that good old song so popular among the Hibernian gentry of the pick and shovel who reside near Harlem, N. Y., 'Work, Ye Terriers, Work!' 'Bail, Ye Terriers, Bail.'"

Three weeks out this entry appears: "Sighted lots of little fishes swimming about my boat, waiting for a dolphin to come along. Then they will go away on the inside of the dolphin."

A novel way to keep boots from wearing out is thus mentioned in the log "Have discovered a new way of keeping boots from wearing out. Don't put them on. Haven't had mine on for a week. They are wearing splendidly."

And so on goes the log, day after day, nearly every entry containing some attempt at humor, showing the fearlessness and buoyant disposition of the lone mariner.

Donning a Veil.

It is an accomplishment worth acquiring in these days when American women fore abroad almost universally veiled as the beauties of the Orient, to put one's veil on successfully, that is, so that the hair is held securely in position, the veil itself does not droop below the hat brim at any point, and neither hangs loose nor draws across the face, rendering a wink inconvenient and the nose a martyr to the tickling sensation which every wearer of a veil knows. Half the beauty of the veil, or, more strictly, the enhancement of beauty which the veil gives, due to the way it is put on. Worse than no veil at all is the veil put on before the bonnet is assumed, as one fashion writer recommends. The filing meshes, pressed closely against the face and hair, leave no room for the charming illusory effect which is the veil's chief "excuse for being." The first requirement in a veil is that it shall be of unstinted size, double width, unless it is to be worn with a very small bonnet a yard long, so that it may be gathered up in generous folds over the hat brim and pinned —a veil should never be tied—well up at the back of the hat. A better fit and a prettier effect is given by a little cluster of gathers directly in the middle of the front. It is to be hoped that women will sometime learn that veils figured with sprigs, or, indeed, anything but unobtrusive dots, are never becoming and make them look, as a man was heard to remark the other day, "as if their faces were covered with flies."

Royalty in a Rage.

The London Echo tells how various people act when they are angry. The prince of Wales winks his left eye rapidly; the emperor of Austria puffs out his cheeks; the czar lays his hand flat on the top of his head; Mr. Gladstone turns swiftly on his heels, as if executing a volte face; Dr. Tanner lays back his head and swears; the sultan of Turkey draws his hand rapidly across his throat; and Mr. Charles Mitchell shoots out his fist suddenly and forcibly in a horizontal direction.

The Herald omited to make mention of the report of one investigating committee that finished its work some time ago. If there is any one thing the people of this state without regard to politics, location, or occupation, agree upon, it is this, that the charges of the express companies for carrying goods is unreasonable and outrageously high. The committee referred to reported back to the house that the matter had been thoroughly investigated and the rates charged found to be fair and reasonable. The cost to the state of this investigation was not much it is true—only $3,50—but it is more than it was worth. The people know too well that the rates are neither fair nor reasonable and the report was not worth $3.50, The constituents of the members of that committee should request them to gather up their franks and go up Salt river.—Norman County Herald,

MENIFEE'S FAST MAIL TRAIN.

Ran Over Crossings Full Tilt—Interlocking Switches Were Later Developed.

There is an old engineer on the Vandalia road who is to some extent responsible for the creation of interlocking devices at railroad crossings throughout Illinois. It was he who opened the eyes of a good many interested people to the fact that fast government mail trains would not multiply until the laws regarding the stoppage of trains at crossings were repealed.

In 1858 one of Uncle Sam's "hummers" was run from the east to St. Louis and thence to Kansas City over the Missouri Pacific, at which time the writer was one of a party making the initial trip on the train.

The train from Indianapolis to St. Louis was hauled via the Vandalia line, and the first engineer to take a jerk at the string of postal cars was Tom Menifee with engine No. 183. There was one thing about Menifee's big iron horse that the people living within ten miles of the line will never forget. It had a whistle that would make a foghorn feel sick.

Illinois people always knew when No. 7, as the fast mail was called, was on the rails because of the continuous deafening snort of 183 upon nearing the numerous crossings. The capers that Tom Menifee cut with this train laid the foundations for a safe system of railroad crossings. The engineer had an utter disregard for such a trifle as a crossing when he had hold of the government's train and he went over it at a speed little less than that at which he approached one. On the slightest provocation he would do up 25 miles in 23 minutes, and he kept it up until a certain event took place.

The Ohio and Mississippi officials began to make strenuous objection to the manner in which Tom with 183 jumped over the track at Altamont. Repeated complaints were sent to the Vandalia officials, who always replied that there must be a mistake, as their engineers were required to stop at that crossing. But there wasn't any mistake about it, and the upshot was that Ohio and Mississippi people invited the Vandalia officials to meet them at Altamont on a certain day and "see what they would see."

"Well," said an Illinois railroad and warehouse commissioner who tells the story, "the two sets of officials spent a certain day agreed upon around the Altamont depot. Each of the Vandalia trains came to a full stop before going over, and the Van people were continually asking 'What are we here for?'

"Finally No. 7 was sighted, and the shrieking steam whistle made out at short intervals proclaimed to the Vandalia man that Tom Menifee was pulling the big load of Uncle Sam's mailbags. It happened that the train had dropped a little time and Tom was making it up. It was after midnight, and the big white eye, which 183 was casting between the rails, came nearer and nearer, passing the 800 foot post without the slightest hesitation, and in a moment had swept past the depot like a cyclone.

"Of course Tom got a chance to take a little rest, but there was not a man in the crowd who didn't admire the celerity with which Menifee hustled the mails."

Soon everybody began to see that the word "fast" connected with a train that was required to stop at crossings was a misnomer. There was a movement toward the erection of safety devices that would enable a train to go over without stopping. Laws passed in 1887 and 1891 permit a train to cross at a certain speed where there are interlocking devices approved by the state railroad and warehouse commission. Within the last six years over 100 of such crossing plants have been put up. In every portion of the state they are operated jointly by the roads that cross each other, under rules and regulations formulated by the consulting engineer of the state board of railroad and warehouse commissioners.—Chicago Tribune.

A Chain of Persecution.

George—No matter how things go, the poor always suffer.

Jack—Yes, the nabobs who own railroads think nothing of running over a poor man's horse.

"Yes, and the man who can afford to own a horse runs down a poor fellow on a bicycle."

"Just so. And the poor fellow on the bicycle runs down the poor fellow who has to walk."

"That's it. And the man who walks stumbles against the cripple who goes on crutches."

"That's the way. And the cripple on crutches spends most of his time jamming his sticks down on other people's corns. It's really a selfish world."—Clipper.

Mr. Parnell and His "Pack."

Somebody once said something about a certain Irish member to Mr. Parnell. I well remember the reply attributed to Mr. Parnell. "Don't believe a word he says," were his words; "he's about the falsest little hound in my pack."—Westminster Budget.

COLUMBUS OUTDONE.

Captain Andrews' Log Reads Like a Romance of the Sea.

In a little book entitled "Columbus Outdone" Captain William A. Andrews, who has acquired fame by crossing the Atlantic in small boats, tells of his adventures in the little 14 foot boat Sapolio, in which he crossed from Atlantic City to Palos, Spain, in 1892. The voyage occupied 63 days, including a stop at the Azores islands.

During all of his four voyages he never tasted warm food. His "stores" consisted mainly of canned beef, condensed milk, ship biscuits, beef extract and canned beans. Nearly all his meals were eaten while he had one hand on the boat's tiller.

Alone on the ocean for weeks at a time, without sighting a vessel, he sailed day after day. Columbus himself would scarcely have ventured on such a trip. America's discoverer had three good sized vessels, 150 men, the best equipments of the times, and in addition the blessing of the church. Captain Andrews had nothing but a coffin shaped boat 14 feet long, a little store of provisions, an old quadrant, a compass and a chart. But through all his dangers and lonely hours Captain Andrews' cheerfulness never deserted him.

"She looks like a coffin," said many who gazed at the little craft before she started. "So she does," replied her captain, with a grim smile, "and as I built her myself I will be my own undertaker if she sinks."

One week after leaving port, when the little old tub was leaking badly and death stared Captain Andrews in the face, this entry was made in the log:

"No mail today. Can't understand why my best girl don't drop me a line."

Another entry describes a bath the captain took, and comments on the fact that "when you're traveling this way no bathing suit or bathtub is necessary."

One dark night a big sea nearly swamped the little craft, and this is how the log describes the event:

"I have just turned in. I have just turned out again. As soon as I closed my eyes a big sea came over and slapped me on the 'coconut.' As I bail her out I am singing that good old song so popular among the Hibernian gentry of the pick and shovel who reside near Harlem, New York: 'Work, ye terriers, work! Bail, ye terriers, bail!'"

Three weeks out this entry appears: "Sighted lots of little fishes swimming about my boat, waiting for a dolphin to come along. Then they will go away on the inside of the dolphin."

A novel way to keep boots from wearing out is thus mentioned in the log: "Have discovered a new way of keeping boots from wearing out. Don't put them on. Haven't had mine on for a week. They are wearing splendidly."

And so on goes the log, day after day, nearly every entry containing some attempt at humor, showing the fearlessness and buoyant disposition of the lone mariner.

Philosophy In the Salons.

The salons, which had been the centers of intellectual life since the days of Louis XIV, took the fever seriously. They were seized with a passion for philosophy, for philanthropy, for all the whims which were taking shape in the storm laden air of those days before the flood. They embraced the deism of Voltaire, the materialism of Diderot and D'Holbach, the pure atheism of Helvetius, or they dreamed with Rousseau and St. Pierre of a renovated humanity yielding to every impulse of nature, and by that means returning to its pristine innocence.

It is not only Walpole who grumbles that the French were no longer the same people; that they had lost their vivacity and were forever discussing. "They talk philosophy at balls," says Segur again, "and moral science in boudoirs." These people of quality, "who know everything without the trouble of learning," established clubs for the study of natural science. They attended the most learned discussions at the academies. One marquise goes to see dissections performed. Another dissects with her own hands.—Macmillan's Magazine.

Du Maurier's Loss of One Eye.

"I was drawing from a model, when suddenly the girl's head seemed to me to dwindle to the size of a walnut. I clapped my hand over my left eye. Had I been mistaken? I could see as well as ever. But when in its turn I covered my right eye, I learned what had happened. My left eye had failed me; it might be altogether lost. It was so sudden a blow that I was as thunderstruck. Seeing my dismay, Van Lerius, came up and asked asked me what might be done in the matter; and when I told him he said that it was nothing; that he had had that himself, and so on. And a doctor whom I anxiously consulted that same day comforted me, and said that the accident was a passing one. However, my eye grew worse and worse, and the fear of total blindness beset me constantly. * * *

"That was the most tragic event of my life. It had poisoned all my existence. * * *

"In the spring of 1859 we heard of a great specialist who lived in Dusseldorf, and we went to see him. He examined my eye, and he said that though the left eye was certainly lost, I had no fear of losing the other, but that I must be very careful, and not drink beer, and not eat cheese, and so on. It was very comforting to know that I was not to be blind, but I have never quite shaken off the terror of that apprehension."—McClure's Magazine.

ACUTE DYSPEPSIA.

SYMPATHETIC HEART DISEASE OFTEN ATTENDS IT.

The Modern Treatment Consists in Removing the Cause.

From Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Republican.

Mrs. V. Curley who has resided in Clarence, Iowa, for the past twenty-two years, tells an interesting story of what she considers rescue from premature death. Her narrative follows:

"For ten years prior to 1894, I was a constant sufferer from acute stomach trouble. I had all the manifold symptoms of acute dyspepsia, and at times other troubles were present in complication—I did not know what it was to enjoy a meal. No matter how careful I might be as to the quality, quantity and preparation of my food, distress always followed eating. I was despondent and blue. Almost to the point of insanity at times, and would have been glad to die. Often and often I could not sleep. Sympathetic heart trouble set in and time and again I was obliged to call a doctor in the night to relieve sudden attacks of suffocation which would come on without a moment's warning.

My troubles increased as time wore on and I spent large sums in doctor bills, being compelled to have medical attendants almost constantly. During 1892 and 1893, it was impossible for me to retain food, and water brashes plagued me. I was reduced to a skeleton. A consultation of physicians was unable to determine just what did ail me. The doctors gave us as their opinion that the probable trouble was ulceration of the coats of the stomach and held out no hope of recovery. One doctor said, "All I can do to relieve your suffering is by the use of opium.

About this time a friend of mine, Mrs. Symantha Smith of Glidden, Iowa, told me about the case of Mrs. Thurston of Oxford Junction, Iowa. This lady said she had been afflicted much the same as I had. She had consulted local physicians without relief, and had gone to Davenport for treatment. Giving up all hope of recovery, she was persuaded by a friend to take Dr. Williams' Pink Pills. The result was almost magical.

I was led to try them from her experience, and before many months I felt better than I had for a dozen years. I am now almost free from trouble, and if through some error of diet I feel badly, this splendid remedy sets me right again. I have regained my strength and am once more in my usual flesh. I sleep well and can eat without distress. I have no doubt that I owe my recovery to Dr. Williams' Pink Pills.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, ($2.50)—by addressing Dr. Williams six boxes for $2.50.

The Name is Everything.

The many tricks of trade that are practiced in these times are justified by a prominent soap manufacturer of this city as being positively necessary to induce a stupid public to buy what is for their benefit. The article in which he takes the most pride is a pure Castile soap, purer and better than that made in Castile. He stamped it as American Castile and was unable to sell any quantity. The people would not buy what little was taken by retail dealers. Under these circumstances the manufacturer changed the stamp on his soap to one abounding in Spanish words which meant the same thing. Since the change in stamp the sales have been remarkable and the soap is ever gaining in popularity.—Philadelphia Record.

STAYS AT ST. PAUL

MINNEAPOLIS WILL NOT SECURE THE STATE CAPITOL.

The Report of the Judiciary Committee Declaring That Minneapolis Could Not Give Loring Park Away Is Adopted by the House.

St. Paul, March 31.—Chairman Underleak, of the house judiciary committee, reported on the Minneapolis capitol site offer to the house. The report is as follows

"Our committee, to whom was referred the resolution in which the city of Minneapolis offers Loring Park as a state capitol site, report as follows: "Loring Park was acquired by purchase, a part by gift and a part by condemnation proceedings. There remains an unpaid balance of $63,000, secured by mortgage. In 1883 and 1884 the city of Minneapolis issued bonds to the amount of $748,000, which bonds are still unpaid, and are a lien on the parks of said city. The city offers to take the necessary steps to release this park from these liens and to indemnify the state against any claim or liability which might arise therefrom, and their powers to do so is not questioned.

"From the examination of the briefs submitted, and from such further examination as your committee was able to make, we are of the opinion that the city of Minneapolis has no authority to convey a legal title of Loring Park to the state. That it is beyond the power of the legislature to confer such authority."

As soon as it had been read Mr. Underleak moved that the report be adopted, and the motion was seconded.

Mr. Feig—I desire to offer an amendment to the report by having added to Mr. Underleak's motion the words, "and return the communication accompanying the same to the city officials of Minneapolis."

The motion, as amended, was adopted without a dissenting vote.

The Hennepin delegation met in the morning and decided to drop the capitol removal agitation. They decided that the best plan would be to abide by the decision of the judiciary committee and allow the matter to rest.

WANTED FOR ROBBERY.

Daughter of a Prominent Citizen of Neillsville Arrested.

St. Paul, March 31.—Sheriff Sheldon of Neillsville, Wis., came to St. Paul early this morning to look for Samuel Cawley and Eva Green, who are wanted in Neillsville on a charge of robbery. Sheriff Sheldon claims that Miss Green is a young girl about seventeen years old, and that this is the first crooked business that she has ever been connected with. She is the daughter of a very prominent business man in Neillsville, and the affair has caused quite a stir in that little burg.

Detective McGuiggan was placed on the case and the sheriff went to Minneapolis to institute inquiries there. While he was gone Detective McGuiggan corralled Cawley and his pretty young accomplice at the union depot, where they went to board a train. They were locked up at the central police station, where Miss Green told the sheriff everything connected with the transaction. At Cawley's solicitation, she said, she lured Olaf Johnson, an old bachelor, to an empty house. While he was there Cawley appeared and robbed both the girl and the bachelor. From Johnson he got $135 and from the girl a few trinkets. They immediately left Neillsville, and the sheriff tracked them to St. Paul. The sheriff took them back.

Sues Judge Baxter.

Fergus Falls, Minn., March 31. — Editor Hoskins, of the Henning Advocate, is evidently trying to convince the few people who have been in doubt as to his sanity that he is really insane, for after a brief quiet he has again sought notoriety by suing Hon. L. L. Baxter, judge of the district court, for $1,000 damages for wilfully denying him a writ of habeas corpus. The complaint was served on the judge to-day by Sheriff Billings. No attorney appeared in the case, the complaint being signed by Hoskins.

A Serious Charge.

St. Paul, March 31—Two well known young men, giving their names as F. P. Martin and F. Wilson, were arrested about 10 o'clock last night by Lieut. Murphy, and Detectives Horan and Ahern and Daly on the charge of criminal assault. The accusers of these young men are Mrs. Lena Hanson, a widow forty-six years old, and Miss Jeanette Paulson, about twenty-two years old, both residing at 1203 North avenue south, Minneapolis.

More Rioting.

Chicago, March 31.—The riotous inmates of the state home for juvenile offenders who have conducted a series of theatrical revolutions recently continued their reign of terror to-day. The few windows that were not broken in last night's outburst were smashed to-day, and another crockery bombardment was started, but prompt action by a police officer quelled the riot before it had reached dangerous proportions.

Rocks for Ruttan.

Winnipeg, March 31.—Maj. Ruttan, city engineer of Winnipeg, to-day secured a verdict for libel against the Tribune, with $400, and costs. The Tribune made certain charges against Ruttan for poor work in connection with the construction of the piers of the Boundary street bridge, and Ruttan entered suit for libel.

Given Up for Lost.

Gloucester, Mass., March 31.—The schooner, Samuel V. Colby, which sailed from Newfoundland on Feb. 23, and of which no tidings have been received, has been given up as lost by her owners. She carried a crew of six men.

Suspected of Robbery.

San Diego, Cal., March 31. — Seymour Jackson, cashier of Godbe's Bank of St. Ensenada, has been arrested on suspicion of having robbed the bank of $12,500 on March 20.

Forests Afire.

Brigantine Junction, Special.—A fierce forest fire has been burning in this section all day. It was discovered early this morning by employes of the Atlantic City Railroad company. The district between Pleasantville, N. J., and this place has been burned over. Many buildings and a large quantity of timber were consumed by the fire, and the loss will aggregate thousands of dollars. The origin of the fire is unknown. The high winds rapidly spread the flames and increased the difficulty of fighting the fire.

HONOR BISMARCK.

Germans are Celebrating His Eightieth Birthday

Friedrichsruhe, April 2. — The German people are to-day celebrating the eightieth anniversary of the birth of Bismarck. Every train arriving at Friedrichsruhe is loaded with presents for the aged statesman, and every post brings hundreds of congratulatory letters not only from people in Germany, but from Germans and others throughout the civilized world. Thousands upon thousands of special business Bismarck post cards have been sold, and a great number have been mailed to the United States. Those in Germany who have received them have put them carefully away to be preserved as mementos of the Iron Chancellor and the great outpouring of the public heart in his honor. Such a popular demonstration has not been witnessed since the return to Berlin of the conquering armies from France. Every preparation had been made here to accommodate vast crowds. The demonstration at the station has been concluded, and the roadway from the station to the schloss has been transformed by willing hands into a veritable triumphal arcade. A beautiful work of art, the gift of inhabitants of Anhalt, who took up a subscription for the purpose, has been erected in the field overlooking the prince's home. The work, which is in bronze, represents a large stag keeping two dogs at bay. For the first time since the beginning of the celebrations in his honor, Prince Bismarck yesterday was somewhat fatigued and indisposed, his old trouble, neuralgia, troubling him slightly. A good night's sleep, however, restored his health and spirits, and to-day he was as bright as ever. Thousands upon thousands of visitors arrived to-day, hoping that they would get a glimpse of the prince. Quite a fair was established in the vicinity of the station. Refreshment booths were erected here and there and everywhere were itinerant purveyors of Bismarck post cards, medals, portraits and mementoes of every description. Quite a thriving trade was done.

The celebration is not confined to this place alone, but every city, town and hamlet throughout the empire is celebrating. All the principal cities are illuminated and decorated.

Preacher Accused of Libel.

Detroit, April 2.—A capias was issued for the arrest of Rev. Donald D. MacLaurin, pastor of Woodward Baptist church, and acting president of the Detroit civic federation, on the charge of libel. The complainant is John B. Leagan, who was an unsuccessful candidate for the Republican nomination of police justice, and who was opposed by the civic federation as being the candidate of the saloon interests. The particular statements alleged to be libelous were made by Rev. Dr. MacLaurin from his pulpit on a recent Sunday, when he is alleged to have declared that the election of Leagan as police justice would be a calamity to the people.

Mr. MacLaurin left Minneapolis early in the winter of '90-1. For several years prior to that time he had been pastor of the Immanuel Baptist church of that city.

Anthony Hesing Dead.

Chicago, April 2.—Anthony C. Hesing, former editor and publisher of the Illinois Staatz Zeitung, died to-day, aged seventy-two. For the last few years Mr. Hesing had retired from active business and political life. When Mr. Hesing retired his son, Washington Hesing, now postmaster of Chicago, took charge of the Staatz Zeitung. Mr. Hesing was born Jan. 6, 1823, in Germany and came to this country in 1839. Throughout the war Mr. Hesing was an ardent supporter of the Lincoln administration, and during the reconstruction era was a Radical. He contributed largely to the Republican congressional victory in Illinois in 1866.

Hanged Himself.

Minneapolis, April 2. — Suspended from a rafter in a newly erected house at the corner of Nineteenth avenue and first street, was found the lifeless body of Albert Dean early yesterday morning. He had evidently suicided some time during the night. He was thirty-two years of age and a native of Sweden. He was without relatives in this city, his only brother dying but a few weeks ago, and it is supposed that despondency preyed on his mind. He boarded at 115 Fourteenth avenue south, and was by occupation a plasterer.

McKinley in Washington.

Washington, April 2.—Gov. McKinley and party arrived in this city today from Savannah. To-morrow he and Mrs. McKinley will visit a few old friends and then take a drive through the city, but there will be no reception or public demonstration. The governor will leave for Columbus to-morrow evening, either at 7 or 10 o'clock, probably at the earlier hour. He is looking well, though a little tired from his trip, and he says he is feeling in very good health.

Stabbed Himself.

Lake City, Minn., April 2.—J. Carlson, a young single man living in Lepin township, attempted suicide, inflicting an ugly gash in his throat and stabbing himself in the chest, neither of which wound is necessarily fatal. Fear that he would be convicted of bastardy was assigned as the cause.

An Old Landmark Damaged.

Chicago, April 2.—The northern portion of the old Times building, a five-story stone structure, was damaged to the extent of $70,000 by fire today. At the early stages of the fire it looked very much as if this old landmark of Chicago would be destroyed.

Taylor Not Located Yet.

Pierre, S. D., April 2. — Dispatches sent from here announcing the locating in Valparaiso, Chile, of Taylor, the defaulting state treasurer, do not seem upon investigation to have good foundation. No one can be located who has heard any such report.

Bank Failure.

West Plains, Mo., April 2.—An assignment was made last night by the Willow Springs bank. The liabilities, including $18,000 of deposits, are $36,000.

Postmaster Convicted.

Utica, N.Y., Special.—In the United States court to-day Hawley E. Webster, late postmaster at Brockport, this state, pleaded guilty to embezzling money orders to the amount of $1,372. He was sentenced to pay a fine to the amount embezzled and to be imprisoned for eighteen months.

An Unknown Man Dies.

Madison, Wis., Special.—An unknown man fell down stairs in a hotel last evening, fracturing his skull and sustaining injuries from which he died early this morning.

Announcing Charity.

A good many of the woman's clubs have found it advisable to drop the custom of announcing charity entertainments and the like from the chair, and in most of the clubs the sale of tickets is opposed, if not forbidden.

It is indeed high time to cry a halt, for it was coming to such a pass that members really dreaded to attend meetings in the various organizations to which they belonged, for, though it is "hard to give your money up," it is harder to say "No," and easier to stay away than to face the disagreeable choice.

What a Blessing
It is to have strong nerves; and how many are denied it. They to whom nature has been niggard in this respect can enjoy nerve vigor and quietude if they use Hostetter's Stomach Bitters, one of the finest nervines and tonics in existence. Dyspepsia, a prolific source of nerve inquietude, is invariably overcome by this genial medicine, which is also potent as a remedy for malarial and kidney trouble and constipation.

Too Much for Endurance.

The Evolution
Of medical agents is gradually relegating the old-time herbs, pills, draughts and vegetable extracts to the rere and bringing into general use the pleasant and effective liquid laxative, Syrup of Figs. To get the true remedy see that it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only. For sale by all leading druggists.

Nearing Chicago.

Higby (on board Pulman car)—What was it that conductor called out?

Mrs. H—Dunno. Twenty minutes for—something or other.

Higby—Ah, divorce probably.

Profitable Farming in Wisconsin.
Settlers on the timber lands, now being offered in small tracts by the Northwestern Lumber Co., Eau Claire, Wis., are finding the soil so well adapted to growing all varieties of tame grasses, that they are able to make dairying a very profitable industry. It is also said that potatoes, and all other vegetables, yield remarkably well, and are of such excellent quality that they sell readily at top prices in the big cities of the Northwest. These lands are located in a thickly settled country, convenient to schools, churches and good markets.

Reason for It.

Gothamite—Well, why not? You get up six hours ahead of us in the morning over there in England.—N. Y. World.

WEAK NERVES
Indicate as surely as any physical symptom shows anything, that the organs and tissues of the body are not satisfied with their nourishment.
They draw their sustenance from the blood, and if the blood is thin, impure, or insufficient, they are in a state of revolt. Their complaints are made to the brain, the king of the body, through the nervous system, and the result of the general dissatisfaction is what we call Nervousness.
This is a concise, reasonable explanation of the whole matter.
The cure for Nervousness, then, is simple. Purify and enrich your blood by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, and the nerves, tissues and organs will have the healthful nourishment they crave. Nervousness and Weakness will then give way to strength and health.
That this is not theory but fact is proven by the voluntary statements of thousands cured by Hood's Sarsaparilla. Read the next column.
"With pleasure I will state that Hood's Sarsaparilla has helped me wonderfully. For several months I could not lie down to sleep on account of heart trouble and also Prostration of the Nerves.
For three years I had been doctoring, but could not get cured. I received relief for a while, but not permanent. Soon after beginning to take Hood's Sarsaparilla there was a change for the better. In a short time I was feeling splendidly. I now rest well and am able to do work of whatever kind. If I had not tried Hood's Sarsaparilla I do not know what would have become of me. I keep it in my house all the time, and other members of the family take it, and all say there is Nothing Like Hood's
Sarsaparilla. I have highly recommended it and one of my neighbors has commenced taking it. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla at every opportunity." MRS. S. BALDOCK, 404 Erie Av., Williamsport, Pennsylvania. Remember

The Balloon Ballast Froze.

The balloon Albatross belonging to the military in Berlin made an ascent last Friday in order to ascertain what effect the intense cold would have on the balloon and instruments. The balloon sailed away over Spandau, went over the Elbe, and, after a voyage of ten hours, came down towards 7 p. m., near the Baltic. At 1,000 metres the wind was from the southwest; at 2,000 metres there was a perfect calm, so that the balloon stood quite still for an hour above the village. It had therefore to descend to catch another wind. The cold at the higher points was so intense that the moist sand in the sacks was frozen into compact stone. Naturally the meat and other provisions were frozen hard and not fit to be used. The two German and one Austrian officers who undertook the voyage suffered a good deal.—London Daily News.

Home From the West.

B. F. Bowman, Ipswich, S. D., is in the city on his way home, having spent several weeks in the Flathead valley of Montana. He said that he would rather go there "broke," as he expressed it, "to begin life, than any other place in the country." As he has traveled extensively over the United States, the remark is peculiarly significant. He came in on the Great Northern.—St. Paul Daily Call.

Profit in the Horse Radish.

The horse radish belongs to the scurvy grass family, all heating and aromatic, and is the most valuable of the species. It is now used only as a delicacy among a few. When the roots are dug the crowns are cut off and these again planted in rows three inches apart and about eighteen inches wide; these should be planted very deep and in very rich ground and allowed to grow three years. When the stalks (roots) will be as thick as broom handles, and as long as the depth of the soil will let them be. They will soon be ready to lift, and use, observing that a three years' succession is needed. It is an exceedingly valuable crop to raise as very few raise it when it should be used by every one. Although it is a native of Great Britain, and it adapts itself in every way here and is perfectly hardy.—Memphis Commercial Appeal.

The Queen at Nice.

The place chosen by Queen Victoria for the scene of her annual holiday this year is one of the most delightful on all the Riveria. Cimiez is practically a part of Nice. But it lies on a hill in the suburbs of that city, where the air is perceptibly dryer and at the same time less exciting to nervous people than in Nice itself. But perhaps the queen's chief reason for selecting Cimiez was that no other place is so excellent and lasting in its good effects on the rheumatism. The queen's sufferings from the tiresome complaint are now chronic and frequently very severe.—Hartford Times.

Raising Cabbages for Sauerkraut.

Chicago's sauerkraut factory is the biggest in the world. In it, during the busy season in the fall, from 500,000 to 600,000 pounds of cabbage, or in other words 250 to 300 tons per day, are sliced up by the rapidly revolving cutters. By the beginning of winter thirty-eight big tanks are filled with cabbage ensilage, closely trodden by men in high rubber boots and each of these tanks is twenty feet in diameter and ten feet deep, the whole holding something over 15,000 barrels, valued at $10 a barrel. Nor does this represent the total output, for the vats are often emptied and refilled in the early part of the season, and the delicious succulent is shipped to every part of the lake region and the Mississippi Valley, and even to the Atlantic and Pacific coasts.

The raising of cabbages appears to be about the only purpose to which the black prairie soil in the neighborhood of Chicago can be profitably adapted, and fifteen to twenty tons an acre are raised by the most successful gardeners. The price paid ranges from $10 to $15 per ton. The plants are mostly raised in the south and shipped from Tennessee and Georgia, by the carload in the early spring, a car containing from 500,000 to 700,000 plants. It is odd, when one comes to think of it, that a cabbage plant should be raised in Georgia, from German seed perhaps, sent to be grown near Chicago, and then manufactured into sauerkraut and consumed in New York along with corned beef that has found its way in a similar manner from the plains of Texas up to the packing houses of the Lake City.—The Cultivator.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

WORK OF THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings in the Senate and House, Comprising a Brief Summary of the Week's Business.

St. Paul, April 5.—Senator Hanna's bill, S. F. No. 550, to provide for the election of the railroad and warehouse commissioners by the people, instead of by the governor's appointment, occupied the senate for an hour and was referred to the judiciary committee in order that there might be a full hearing, the bill to be reported back to the senate in forty-eight hours. The vote was: For reference to the judiciary committee—Allen, Barr, Cole, Currier, Fuller, Howard, Iltis, Johnson, W. E.; Keller, Morgan, Ozmun, Pottgeiser, Rorrud, Schaller, Sheehan, Smith, Sperry, Stebbins, Spencer, Stevens, Sweningsen, Wyman, Yale, Young—24.

Against—Cronkhite, Hanna, Hanson, Meneman, Hodge, Johnson, A. G.; Knatvold, Torson, Lloyd, Miller, McHale, Peterson, Potter, Reishus, Ringdahl, Sevatson, Thompson, Thorpe, Wing—19.

Gov. Clough sent to the senate the appointment of Dr. C. L. Wells of Hennepin county as member of the board of trustees of the insane asylums, for the term ending January, 1898, vice Dr. W. A. Jones. The appointment was concurred in.

Mr. Miller's bill to place express companies under the supervision of the railroad and warehouse commission was approved.

Bills Passed—Cole—To amend sections 1, 3 and 6, chapter 9, General Laws 1887, relating to the practice of medicine and licencing of physicians and surgeons.

Potter—To provide for the election of a state dairy and food commissioner and to define his duties.

Morgan—To amend section 10, chapter 36, General Statutes 1878, relating to the removal of school sites.

Stevens—To regulate the payment of grand and petit and grand jurors' fees and mileage in the district courts.

Peterson—For an appropriation for a monument to mark the site of Fort Ridgley, besieged by Indians in 1862.

Young—To amend section 4, chapter 6, General Laws 1887, reducing the penalty for the sale of liquor without license so as to bring it within the jurisdiction of justices of the peace.

In the House.

The house disposed of an immense amount of business and, besides passing a number of bills on the calendar, disposed of over twenty bills on general orders while Mr. Kendall was in the chair during the afternoon session.

The bill for freedom of traffic in food products was passed. Senator Jones' Russian thistle bill was favorably recommended. Senator Hanscom's bill for the relief of cyclone sufferers was defeated.

St. Paul, April 6.—The judiciary committee has decided to recommend the impeachment of Judge Ives. The committee stood nine to seven in favor of impeachment, and there will be a minority report recommending censure. The chairman did not vote.

These reports may be submitted to the house to-day, but they may not be received until Thursday, as the committee decided to recommend that the consideration of the reports be made a special order for next Thursday evening. There will doubtless be a bitter fight over the adoption of the majority report, as the friends and opponents of Judge Ives have been hard at work with the members of the house, and considerable feeling has already been stirred up.

Senate Proceedings.

Shortly after the senate was called to order the announcement was made that ex-Gov. Marshall had died in California. On motion of Senator Stevens a committee was appointed to draft suitable resolutions, which were adopted by a rising vote. Late in the afternoon Senator Yale announced that the report of Mr. Marshall death could not be verified, none of his relatives and friends having received the information. In view of the uncertainty it was decided to let the action of the senate stand until definite news could be had.

The game bill was passed, and now goes to the governor for his signature. The principal changes made in the existing game laws, so far as they interest the general public, are:

The spring shooting of ducks and geese must stop on April 15 instead of April 25.

No elk, moose or caribou shall be killed before Jan. 1, 1898. Deer of all varieties can be killed lawfully between Nov. 1 and 20, and most important, no person must kill more than five deer in one season.

An important change is one that will prevent anybody having venison unless he kills it or receives it as a present from some friend.

A change important to trout fishermen cuts off April and September fishing. The season will begin May 1 and end Sept. 1.

Fishing with hook and line for bass, wall-eyed pike, is lawful except during March and April. A section is added to the general law forbidding the shipping from the state any bass, croppy, pike, perch or trout.

Allen's bill to provide for the orderly observance of Memorial day was passed. All gaming, horse racing, bicycle racing, boat racing, bicycle tournaments, base ball games, foot ball games, or other public sports or shows previous to the hour of 5 o'clock in the afternoon of any 30th day of May, commonly called Memorial day, are prohibited.

In the House.

In the house the proposed constitutional amendment relating to the investment of the permanent school fund was passed.

The inheritance tax bill, which was provided for by the constitutional amendemnt adopted at the last general election, was slightly amended and passed.

Other important bills which ran the gauntlet on their reading were: Senator Jones' Russian thistle bill; Mr. Sander's, to prevent commitment for crime to institutions not under the direct control of public officials; and Mr. Dale's constitutional amendment to prohibit the appropriation of public funds to institutions or associations not under the direction of public officials.

There was a lively debate over the passage of the Sander bill, and the remarks became somewhat personal at times. The bill was passed by a vote of 69 to 27.

The text of the bill follows: No person arrested charged with having committed a crime shall be committed or sentenced to confinement, nor be confined in any institution or place of detention, governed, controlled or under the auspices of any sectarian association, denomination, society, church or corporation, or in any place of confinement or detention not under the direct control, conduct and management of public officials.

Senator Miller's bill to put express companies under the operation of the railroad and warehouse commission law was the only bill upon the calendar ready to be voted upon. The bill passed by a bare margin of one vote. Senator Miller says he is satisfied the bill will pass the house without any decided opposition. Senator Wyman occupied the chair in committee of the whole. The only bill taken up was S. F. No. 510, to amend sections, title 2, chapter 66, General Statutes of 1878, limiting the time when action may be begun for damages for injuries to within two years of the time when the injury was sustained. Senator Potter said there was no opposition to the bill, and Senator Wyman explained its general operation. The bill was recommended for passage.

The afternoon session of the committee of the whole was presided over by Senator Iltis. The only bill considered was H. F. No. 20—McGrath—to appropriate $50,000 additional moneys for the purpose of opening closed water courses leading into the Red river and tributaries in Wilkin, Clay, Norman, Polk and Marshall counties. The vote was overwhelmingly in favor of the bill, and it was recommended for passage. The committee then resolved itself into the senate and the ayes and nays were demanded upon the question of adopting the committee's report. A motion to suspend the rules and put the bill upon its final passage failed to get the necessary 34 votes.

The meat inspection bill seemed to have very few friends in the senate when it came up on general orders. It was beaten to a stand-still and, without hope of resurrection; it was indefinitely postponed, notwithstanding a hard fight made, first to secure its passage, and later to save it for the purpose of amendment on the part of Senator Stevens.

The senate agreed to the amendment by the house to three senate bills, and repassed the same, as follows: S. F. No. 325, to permit the investment of the state school funds in county and other public bonds of the state.

S. F. No. 300, relating to the duties and compensation of county surveyors and deputies.

S. F. No. 418, providing for the creation and organization of new counties (to prevent Polk county from being cut up into five counties.)

Twenty-Nine Bills Passed.

The house sustained its reputation for industry, and put in the morning and afternoon sessions on the calendar, passing twenty-nine bills.

Bills Passed — Staples, an act to amend chapter 22 of the General Laws of 1889, relating to mineral lands; Van Sant, relating to duties of adjutant general; Staples, to provide elementary normal instruction in state high schools; Wright, to provide a bounty for the arrest and conviction of chicken and poultry thieves; O'Reilly, to provide for separate elections for municipalities; Johnson, E. C., to amend section 92 of chapter 6 of the General Statutes of 1878, providing for reports and examinations of private banks; Mallette, relating to boiler inspectors; Jones, J. D., relating to findings of facts by juries in certain cases; Johnson, C. E., relating to the probate code; Johns, relating to salaries of county commissioners; Cant, relating to the probate code; Sivright, relating to section corners; Cant, relating to logs and lumber; Wright, to make municipal corporations subject to garnishee proceedings in certain cases; Gibbs, relating to grain inspection, establishing civil service in the department; Damp, to prevent the spread of noxious weeds on highways; Committee on Education, (substitute for H. F. No. 549), to appropriate money for higher education; Johns, to encourage smelting iron ore; Committee on Public Parks, to establish an interstate park at the Dalles of the St. Croix; Bickford, relating to the certificate of county auditors upon deeds, etc.; Reeves, to appropriate money for drainage in Pope county; Smith, C. A., relating to the qualification of teachers; Dingman, relating to elections.

St. Paul, April 9.—The senate went into committee of the whole during the morning session with Senator Dunham in the chair. The only bill considered was H. F. No. 468, to provide for the establishment of two additional experimental agricultural stations. It carries $30,000 to provide for establishing the stations and run them for two years. The bill was recommended for passage.

At the afternoon session Barr's bill to provide for the free examination or analysis by the University of Minnesota of specimens of minerals or clays found within the state was opposed.

The three normal school bills, S. F. No. 466—Heneman—for a normal school at Glencoe, McLeod county, S. F. No. 354—Miller—for a normal school at Pipestone, Pipestone county, and S. F. No. 178—Hanson—for a normal school at Litchfield, Meeker county, were taken up and considered together. The latter bill had been recommended for indefinite postponement previously, but was restored to general orders at the request of Senator Hanson. After this defeat a combine was made between the friends of the several normal bills and other appropriation measures, and it was the first to run the gauntlet. There was some opposition, but upon a show of hands the Litchfield bill was reported for passage by a vote of 13 to 9. The Pipestone bill and the Glencoe bill were reported for passage without opposition.

Senator Potter reported for passage S. F. No. 728—to compel the attendance of children in school in cities of 30,000 and over. An effort was made by Senator Ozmun to pass the bill under suspension of the rules, but it failed and the bill was placed upon general orders.

The senate concurred in the house amendments to S. F. No. 417, to provide for consolidation of two or more colleges and the bill was repassed.

Under suspension of the rules Senator Sperry as a special committee, reported in favor of the passage of S. F. No. 660, to legalize certain county bonds. The bill was read the third time and passed.

In the House.

The house put in nearly the entire day considering general orders in committee of the whole, and thirty-two bills were recommended to be placed on the calendar for final passage.

During the morning session Mr. Reeves moved that H. F. No. 781, his bill to repeal the law providing for a tax of 1 cent a ton on iron ore and leaving mining property to be assessed and taxed as other property is taxed, be made a special order for 10 a. m. Tuesday. There was no objection, although Mr. Jacobson asked that Mr. Reeves explain the bill, and it was made a special order as requested.

Just before the noon recess Mr. Cant moved, that the vote, whereby the vote was made a special order, be reconsidered. He explained that under the present system the state receives one-half the tax, which in 1894 amounted to over $10,000. Under the other system of taxation the state would only receive about one-fourteenth of the tax, the remaining thirteen-fourteenths going to the county. The motion to reconsider was lost and the special order for 10 a. m. Tuesday stands.

During the morning session of the committee Mr. Gutterson was in the chair. When Mr. Johns' bill, H. F. No. 551, to provide for rebating the royalty on iron ore which is smelted within the state, was reached there was trouble. Progress was finally reported and, the fight will be renewed when the bill is again reached on general orders.

INCOME TAX LAW UPHELD.

But Parts of It Are Declared Unconstitutional.

Chicago, April 9.—A dispatch to the Tribune from Washington says: The United States supreme court in the income tax case has reversed the decision of the lower court, but the income tax law as a whole is upheld, but only by a divided court. Two important portions of the law, however, have been decided to be unconstitutional, and they are so serious as to effect materially not only the revenues of the government, but the estimation in which the income tax will be held by the people. Under the decision to be handed down by the court all incomes derived from rents are exempted from taxation by the federal government, and all incomes derived from state and municipal bonds are similarly exempted. In other respects the income tax law stands as it was passed last August, but the result of the consultations in the supreme court shows very conclusively that the law can be easily picked to pieces, provided suits are brought to contest each particular point that comes up.

TOOK IN THE SIGHTS.

Two Preachers Visit the Milwaukee Tenderloin District.

Milwaukee, April 9.—Rev. Walter J. Patton, of Asbury M. E. church, and another preacher, whose name is not positively known, spent nearly the whole of last night in a tour of the Milwaukee tenderloin district. They were accompanied by a well known man about town, and they saw things, Mr. Patton says, that eclipsed for moral depravity anything he has ever seen, and he has made investigations of the same kind in Chicago and New York. The man who piloted the preachers says he spent $30 and that the preachers' trip cost them less than $2 each. They not only saw the can-can, but visited the gambling houses, where they were taken for "hot sports" and invited to try their luck on the turn of a card. Mr. Patton intimates that the evidence he secured would be used in a campaign against vice that has been mapped out by well known people.

LADIES AT THE POLLS.

School Elections Held in Montana Cities.

Helena, Mont., April 9.—School elections were held in all the principal towns of the state, and were remarkable from the fact that in most of the cities at least half the vote was cast by women. In this city considerably more than half was cast by them. So far as known but one woman was elected trustee, and that was in Helena, Dr. Maria M. Dean being the successful candidate. There was a woman candidate in Butte, but the women there stuck strictly to their ticket and did not make a favorite of the candidate of their own sex. In Butte and Anaconda the issue was A. P. A. and anti. The A. P. A. carried Butte by a big majority, but were defeated in Anaconda. The same issue cut some issue in other places, but not so much so as in the two cities named.

Electrical Works Burned.

Newark, N. J., April 9.—The works of the Croker-Wheeler Electrical Supply company at Ampere, in East Orange, were destroyed by fire to-day. It is estimated that the loss will foot up little less than $100,000. Insurance $40,000. The origin of the fire is unknown. Two of the seven buildings were saved. The five were burned to the ground, and a great quantity of valuable machinery was almost totally ruined. A large number of men are thrown out of employment. Stored in these buildings was a considerable quantity of finished work.

Receiver Appointed.

Findlay, Ohio, April 9. — John D. Briggs of Cleveland was yesterday appointed receiver of the Findlay Rolling Mill company, whose affairs were wound up last week on an attachment for $40,000.

Bank Robber Sentenced.

Perry, Iowa, April 9.—Crawford, the bank robber, pleaded guilty to-day at Adel to one indictment of robbery and two for assault with intent to kill, and was given a sentence of twenty-two years.

SPIT IN HIS FACE.

DISGRACEFUL ENCOUNTER IN A LITTLE ROCK HOTEL.

A Legislator Meets the Governor and Spit in His Face—The Governor Returns the Fire and Draws a Revolver, but is Disarmed.

Little Rock, Ark., April 9.—The spectacle of an honorable member of the Arkansas legislature, livid with rage, spitting in the face of the governor of this commonwealth, quickly returned by a violent emission of the executive upon the angered features of the lawmaker and a flourish of firearms in the hands of the governor, was witnessed in the lobby of Gleason's hotel, and was the result of the sensational charges of bribery in connection with the railroad commission bill sprung in the house of representatives Saturday by Mr. Yancey of Phillips county.

Mr. Jones of Union county, one of the principals in the altercation with the governor, Saturday arose to a point of personal privilege and denounced Gov. Clark as being at the bottom of the charges. He said that Gov. Clark was a demagogue and was going around like the assassin in the night with a knife stabbing in the back men who were his peers.

When Gov. Clark met Jones in the lobby at Gleason's, and requested a private interview with him Jones replied that he would accompany the governor nowhere, and that if the chief executive had anything to say to him to make it known there. Hot words followed and in a fit of anger Jones spat in the governor's face. Gov. Clark returned the insult, and, quick as a flash had drawn his revolver, and the difficulty might have resulted in bloodshed but for the quick action of bystanders who disarmed Gov. Clark. The governor was later arrested and released on his own recognizance. He will, he says, plead guilty to the charge of assault. Further trouble may follow.

NEGROES SHOT.

By Young Texans Returning From a Day's Hunt.

Houston, Tex., April 9.—Last night four young men, all under twenty years of age, —. Reynolds, J. F. Preston, Sid Preacher and —. Leonard, were driving into the city on their return from a day's hunt. As they passed a crowd of negroes some of the latter made jeering remarks, and upon one of the boys in the wagon making an answer, one of the negroes threw a stone and struck one of the white boys, and another negro drew a revolver. The boys opened fire upon the negroes with Winchesters, killing two negroes and one woman. Several shots were fired by both sides. The white men were arrested and are now in jail awaiting the coroner's investigation. None of the white men were seriously hurt.

THE LOWEST PULSE.

It Was Possessed by a Seattle Banker Who Dies in New York.

New York, April 9. — Anthony M. Gannon, sixty years old, a merchant of Spokane Falls, Wash., was found dead in his room at the Sturtevant house to-day. The coroner found that he died from natural causes. He was president of the Spokane Falls National bank. Death was undoubtedly caused by heart failure, as Mr. Gannon had for many years been noted as the man with the lowest pulsation on record. His average pulsation was only thirty-eight, except during the past few months, when it had risen to forty-four per minute.

An Old Man Murdered.

Altoona, Pa., April 9.—Henry Bonnekâ, an aged German who lived alone in the Western part of the city, was found dead on the floor of his room to-day. There was a wound on the back of his head, evidently made by a blunt instrument. A short rope was tied tightly around his neck, and a knotted handkerchief was fastened in his mouth. There was also a wound on the hip, which looked as if it had been made by a kick. He was an old bachelor, had not been seen since last Thursday, and it is supposed that he was murdered that night. No money was found on the premises.

Terms of Peace.

Paris, April 9.—It is stated on reliable authority that Japan has proposed the following conditions for the conclusion of peace: The independence of Corea, the cession of Southern Manchuria, including Port Arthur, the cession of the Island of Formosa, the opening of Chinese ports and rivers to commerce, the payment of an indemnity of 400,000,000 yen and the occupation of a number of strategic points until the indemnity shall have been paid.

Wilde Has Insomina.

London, April 9.—Oscar Wilde is suffering from insomnia. The prison surgeon on Saturday night gave him a sleeping draught. It had no effect on him, and he continued pacing his cell nearly all night long. He eat almost nothing, although he is allowed to have food sent to him from the outside. Another prisoner cleans his cell. He is not allowed to smoke and is allowed to receive only a single visitor daily.

Truly a Land Office Business.

Grand Forks, N. D., April 9.—The United States land office in this city to-day concluded the largest week's business on its records in the past eight years. Sixty-nine filings were made and eleven final proofs, making in all a total of eighty quarter sections taken, representing 12,800 acres of Uncle Sam's domain. Most of the land is situated in Cavalier county, tributary to Langdon.

Pickin Released.

Eau Claire, Wis., April 9.—Asigal Pickin, who was arrested Nov. 23 on the charge of ruining a young girl by the aid of hypnotism, was released on his own recognizance until the next term of the circuit court, but it is generally believed that the case will be dropped.

New Bank for Tracy.

Washington, April 9.—The First National Bank of Tracy, Minn., has been authorized to begin business with a capital of $50,000.

ON CHURCH STEPS.

Double Tragedy Witnessed by the Worshipers.

Wichita, Kan., April 9.—A horrible tragedy occurred on the steps of the Lincoln Street Christian church as the congregation was walking out after the service at noon yesterday. On the sidewalk in front of the church Walter Scott fired a bullet into the brain of his wife and she fell a corpse. While the people stood agast at the terrible deed Scott placed the revolver in his mouth and sent a bullet crashing through the roof of his mouth into his brain and fell dead almost within reach of the body of his wife. At the sight of the bloody tragedy two or three women fainted and much excitement prevailed. Both bodies were taken to the undertakers. When Mrs. Scott was shot she was walking out of the church with her brother. Mr. and Mrs. Scott were married about two years ago. She was seventeen and he nineteen. They separated about a year ago, she going to her father's house and he going to Kansas City. Scott returned to Wichita a week ago. He went to church yesterday, and as he walked out asked his wife if she would return to him, and when she refused he shot her.

WILL INTEREST HAYWARD.

Status of Hypnotism in Murder Cases Judicially Passed Upon.

Topeka, Kan., April 9.—The supreme court of Kansas to-day practically recognized hypnotism as a factor in murder cases. The celebrated Sumner county hypnotic murder case was decided by the court, and Anderson Gray, who planned the murder of Thomas Patton, was convicted of murder. On May 5, last, Thomas Patton was shot and killed near his home in Sumner county by Thomas McDonald. On the trial of the case it was shown that the murder was planned by Anderson Gray, who, by the influence he possessed over McDonald, persuaded him to kill Patton. The supreme court now acquits McDonald, who did the shooting, and convicts Gray.

Silver Party Formed.

Birmingham, Ala., April 9.—A silver party is the latest acquisition in political affairs in Alabama. At Athens, Limestone county, 400 Democrats, silverits and Populists met and banded themselves together in a central silver club. They declared themselves in favor of free coinage of silver and bound themselves together without respect to party ties to support for office only such men as favor their views.—H. P. Lane, state commissioner of agriculture, a Democrat, withdrew from the convention when his motion to fight for free silver with Democratic party lines was lost.

Probable Fate of Three Young Men of Wisconsin.

Lansing, Iowa, April 9. — Three young men, John Haverly, Earl Wakefield and Ole Everson, living in the country back of Desoto, Wis., five miles north of this city, went on a hunting expedition last Sunday and have since been unheard of. A gun, which was identified as the property of the boys, was found in a floating boat near Victory Sunday, and this leads to the suspicion that all have been drowned. A reward of $50 has been offered for the recovery of the body of Haverly and $10 each for the other two.

His Life a Failure.

Detroit, Mich., April 9. — The dead body of a well dressed young man with a bullet hole through the heart was found on Concord avenue this morning. The man arrived late last Wednesday, and a note in his pocket told that he was traveling auditor of the Buckeye Supply Company of Toledo, and was the son of the president of the company. In a note to his father the young man wrote that his life was a failure, that he had found that he could not resist liquor.

Bad for Pilgrims.

London, April 9.—A dispatch to the Standard from Vienna says that the Politische Correspondenz states that cholera has broken out in the Lazaretto, on the Island of Kamaran, off the west coast of Arabia, in a bay of the Red sea. Thirty persons have been attacked and there are several deaths daily. Much alarm exists owing to the approach of the pilgrim season. Attempts to persuade the sultan of Turkey to stop the pilgrimage have failed.

Pensioners Rebel.

Nashua, N. H., April 9.—The pensioned soldiers at the state soldiers' home, whose pension money, except $2 a month, under the rules of the home, is kept by the management, have rebelled, stating that they will refuse to turn over the money when it comes this week, and that they will leave the home in a body if the point is forced. The directors say the rules will be enforced.

Robbed a Millionaire.

Chicago, April 9.—Burglars entered the residence of Norman B. Ream, the millionaire board of trade man, and also Edson Keith's, senior, proprietor of the wholesale millinery firm of Edson Keith & Co. They secured $2,000 worth of jewelry and diamonds at eRam's residence, and property worth $150 at Keith's.

Thieves Are Known.

Springfield, Ill., April 9.—The expert thieves who looted the Springfield postoffice Wednesday are known—the postoffice inspector having discovered their identity. Three of them are well known New York crooks and the fourth an English bank sneak thief. Inspectors are keeping the names secret for the present and hope to capture the men in a few days.

Cholera Decreasing.

Washington, April 9.—The report of Surgeon General Wyman for the week past shows that cholera is decreasing in Austria-Hungary, and that it has entirely disappeared from Galicia and Prussian Silesia.

Broke Through the Ice.

Bayfield, Wis., April 9. — An unknown man tried to cross on the ice yesterday from Red Cliff to Sand Island. When but forty feet from the shore the ice broke and he was drowned.

The persecutors of Judge Ives must have some better evidence for impeachment than the public has been able to discover thus far, for action calculated to deprive him of his office will prove a boomerang to the Republican majority. Politics may make judges, we have become rather used to that in this state, but we are hardly prepared to see it unmake them.—Minneapolis Journal,

The most startling figures yet brought to light are from the report of the statistician of agriculture for the months of January and February 1895, of the fact that farmers are 351 million dollars poorer than they were a year ago on the single item of live stock, What has brought about this one single item? The one and single answer is the financial question—the crushing plan of placing this country on a single gold standard—the pauperizing of the masses by the cruel methods of the classes,

When a government, which is not only supposed to represent the people but to be the people, will make a secret contract with banks for the sale of its bonds, it is time such an administration be abolished. If the people had been allowed to bid for the last issue of bonds they would have been promptly taken up, and many millions netted to the government. President Cleveland and his cabinet, for sordid reasons, have invited the wrath of their own generation, and the contempt of all posterity,—Progressive Age.

It is said of the man who won't take a paper because he can borrow one has invented a machine by which he can cook a dinner by the smoke from his neighbor's chimney. The same fellow sits in a back pew in church to save interest on his contributions, and is always borrowing a ride to town to save the wear and tear on his own horseflesh. Yes we know him, He is first cousin to the man who never winds up his watch for fear of breaking the the spring, He undoubtedly was a near relative of the man who went into the back yard during the recent cold snap, soaked his hair in water, let it freeze, and then broke it off in order to cheat the barber out of a hair cut,—Exchange.

Yesterday Gov. Clough signed House File No. 332, and the bill is now a law The object of this bill is to change the dates for holding terms of district court in the Fourteenth judicial district. The district is made up of Norman, Polk, Marshall, Kittson and Roseau counties. The changes are not great and are as follows:

Norman county, first Monday in June and first Monday in October,

Polk county, fourth Monday in June and first Modnay in December.

Marshall county, third Monday in May and second Monday in November.

Kittson county, third Monday in June, Roseau county, fourth Monday in July.

The bill was introduced by Senator Ringdal, and should be duly appreciated by the farmers who are called upon to attend court. The dates are set at a time when farm work is not so rushing.—Crookston Tribune,

St Paul, April 5,—Things are certainly looking much brighter for Judge Ives than at any time since the petition for impeachment was introduced into the house and referred to the judiciary committee. On Wednesday night the matter was taken up by the committee and a vote resulted in 9 to 8 for a report in favor of impeachment. An adjournment was then taken until 5 o'clock last night when the matter was again taken up. After discussing the situation thoroughly a vote was taken which resulted in a vote of 9 to 7 in favor of an impeachment report, Chairman Underleak did not vote on the question, It was evident that no agreement could be reached, and it was decided that two reports would be made to the house one by the majority, and one by the minority. These reports will be made a special order for next Friday evening and there is but little doubt that a vote will be taken by the house on that day. The friends of Judge Ives, who are at the capitol claim that the vote will result in an entirely satisfactory manner to Judge Ives,—Crookston Tribune,

CAPTAIN WARLEY'S DUEL

A Story Illustrating the Captain's Courage, "Bully Nelson's" Quarrels.

In a letter to the Charleston News a friend of the late Captain Alexander Fraser Warley of the Confederate navy tells the following story illustrating his personal courage: On entering the United States navy many "youngsters" were submitted to what we know as "hazing," and there was on the training ship to which Warley was assigned an officer named Nelson, of Alabama, I think, who was known as "Bully Nelson," on account of his fondness for [illegible] his subordinates. He had had many quarrels on his hands in consequence, but generally managed to know whom to kick."

Warley was sitting quietly in a corner of the messroom the first evening that Nelson joined the ship, somewhere in South American waters. Nelson, seeing the new boy, proceeded to make facetious remarks about the modest, retiring young fellow, who, however, did not notice him at first at all. After awhile Nelson grew more personal, and then Warley warned him to stop, but Nelson mistook his man, and going up to him "tweaked" his nose, saying that was how he treated "youngsters."

Warley indignantly flung aside the book he was reading, and in a voice and with a manner not to be mistaken said to Nelson: "I am going to kill you, and you had better arm yourself." He walked to his bunk, got a pistol, and coming back proceeded to "open fire." He was seized and put under arrest, of course, but he said to Nelson, "Meet me on shore at daylight, and we will settle this matter, for it shall not rest here." Nelson, who knew Warley was under arrest, went ashore with friends and spent the night in town enjoying whatever pleasures were to be had, and early in the morning went with his companions to the place Warley had indicated on the shore near the anchorage. He thought it would be a nice thing to be able to say he had been there and that Warley had not turned up, but he was mistaken again, for Warley was there, dripping wet, having got by his [illegible] and reached the shore by swimming. There was nothing to do but to arrange the "meeting," and Warley requested one of Nelson's friends to act as his second, as under the circumstances he had not been able to bring a friend.

Still Unsatisfied.

The meals on board a sailing ship are perhaps monotonous enough to justify the chronic grumbling of sailors. Monday's dinners are all alike, Tuesday's and Wednesday's can be foretold, and so on through the list. And the sailors, having little to think of in smooth weather, eat—and grumble. As to the latter habit, a good story is told.

Once upon a time there lived a skipper whose wife told him that if she went to sea the poor sailors for whom she cared would never find fault with their food. So her husband took her with him on his next voyage.

Now this good woman attended to the cooking herself, and the scouse was thick with fresh vegetables, the bread was white and destitute of weevils, the meat was good and the duff almost half plums, but still the men growled. Then the skipper's wife bethought her of the hens she had brought to lay eggs for her husband, and she killed and roasted them and sent them forward to the forecastle on the cabin china.

"At last," said she in triumph, "the men will know how seriously we consider their comfort."

At eight bells she stole forward to the fore scuttle to listen to the praises of her skill, and as she listened she looked down the hatch in time to see a big black fist plunge a fork into the hen the while a hoarse voice growled:

"I say, Bill, what d'yo think this bloomin fowl died of?"—Youth's Companion.

Hoot, Toot, Hue and Cry.

Hoot is to make the noise of an owl, huette or chouette, as howl is owl aspirated, ululare. Heots, or hootes, plural, requires only the addition of [illegible] as a common ending to make hutesium, and we get the very word wanted in Barel, hue-crieria. If we write it hu-tes, we have only added a euphonic "e." To hoot brings us to toot, and the tooting horn of the old mail coach and so to the hootes and hue above arrived at.

To toot is to hoot through the long horn; to tout is only another spelling of the same word, meaning to advertise by blowing a horn. In "hue and cry" it is farther cut down still, but it brings us back, all the same, to the common law and vivid description of a hasty pursuit "with horn and voice." It is not often that the law is so picturesque and verisimilable.—Notes and Queries.

A Choice of Evils.

Landlady—Would you advise me to send my daughter to a cooking school or to a music school?

Boarder (reflectively)—Well, I think I'd send her to a cooking school. It may be more fatal in its results, but it isn't anything like so noisy.—Detroit Free Press.

New Conditions.

In 1995—"You'll do just as I tell you," said the husband of the advanced woman.

"What?" shrieked his wife.

"I mean it!" said her husband. "I'd have you understand that I wear the skirts in this family."—Chicago Record.

"Days of Absence" was the work of Jean Jacques Rousseau, who claimed to have written the melody also, though his claim in this direction is disputed, the assertion being made that the tune is an Italian folk song. In Europe the song is called "Rousseau's Dream."

One on Rudyard Kipling.

A capital story is being told of Mr. Rudyard Kipling, and little Miss Dorothy Drew, Mr. Gladstone's granddaughter. During the novelist's stay in Wiltshire this summer he met little Dorothy at a country house, and being very fond of children took her about the grounds and told her stories. After a time Mrs. Drew fearing that Mr. Kipling must have had enough of the child's society, called her, and said: "Now, Dorothy, I hope you have been a good child and have not been wearying Mr. Kipling." "O, not a bit, mother," replied the little celebrity: "but you have no idea how Mr. Kipling has been wearying me."—Tit-Bits.

His Ultimatum.

"And you reject my offer?" he said to her, intensely. "You refuse to be the one woman in all the world to me?"

"I'm afraid so," she confessed, rather kindly, for she meant well.

"Then I have but one thing to say to you, madam," he said reaching for his hat.

"I am sure you have my permission to say that. What is it?"

He drew himself up to his full height.

"There are others," he replied haughtily, and passed out of the game.—Detroit Free Press.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

EASTER SONG.

"Because I live, ye shall live also."
The earth is dark nor leaf nor blossom
 Decks the brown waste; the hills are bare;
Loss and regret are everywhere.
Ah! sleeps there not in Nature's bosom
 Some recompense, some sweet repair?

Where are our lost? We wander weeping,
 Filled full with anguish and dismay;
The world is veiled, the skies are gray;
Faith in our hearts is dead or sleeping;
 In vain we watch, in vain we pray.

Hark! on the leafless boughs above us
 A blue bird's warble, soft and clear;
Look down! a blade of grass is here.
Slight choral, tiny hint, to move us;
 Yet, 'tis the turning of the year.

Hear in thy soul, thou unbelieving,
 One word forever dear and sure:
"I live." The promise stands secure.
Here is the balm to heal thy grieving,
 Hope of the patient and the pure.

Break out, O heavens, into singing!
 Awake and shout, O slumbering clod!
Here is thy life. The breath of God
Through earth and heaven in joy is ringing;
 His spring the cold, gray fields hath trod.

Ye lilies of the field, adore Him,
 Ye that have slept in dust and dew;
 Ye faithless mortal spirits, too,
Bow down with rapturous song before Him.
 Behold! He maketh all things new!

—Rose Terry Cooke.

EASTER IN FLORENCE.

Ceremony of the Dove With the Tail of Fire.

Precisely at noon on the before Easter a very curious ceremony takes place in Florence. Early in the morning of that day an immense black structure, some twenty-five feet in height, is drawn by a number of milk-white oxen, wearing garlands of flowers, into the center of the square and left standing before the cathedral.

This strange looking structure of iron, which is called the Easter carro is not only heavily decorated with flowers, but is loaded beneath the blossoms with fireworks. Meanwhile the great west doors of the cathedral have been thrown open and a pole set up in the choir of the Duomo before the high altar.

A great, smooth, firm rope is then extended from this pole across the whole length of the nave and carried outside until it reaches the carro, to which it is firmly fastened. Perched on the rope, close to the pole by the altar, is a beautiful white dove, exquisitely molded in plaster.

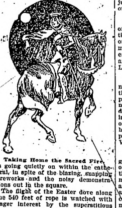
Long before noon the nave of the cathedral the square and all the surrounding streets fill up with the crowd of people. Many have come in from the country, walking long distances, to be present at the brilliant ceremony of the carro.

By 11:30 the procession of clergy is formed in the cathedral, and the archbishop, the priests and the choir issue forth, splendidly dressed, to make the circuit of the Duomo. They then re-enter the cathedral and begin the Easter services.

The audiences waits breathlessly. At the stroke of twelve the white dove with tail on fire, darts along the rope, glides down through the nave, out at the gates, over the heads of the excited crowds, until it flies into the flowers of the carro. With its tail of fire it ignites the whole mass of fireworks.

Remains Above the Altar.

Then with a sudden start, it skims along the rope until it reaches its perch on the pole over the high altar. By this time its fiery tail is quite extinguished, and the beautiful snow-white creature remains stationary during the remainder of the services. For all this time the Easter even mass is going quietly on within the cathedral, in spite of the blazing, snapping fireworks and the noisy demonstrations out in the square.



Taking Home the Sacred Fire.

The flight of the Easter dove along the 540 feet of rope is watched with eager interest by the superstitious peasantry. If nothing interrupts the swift course of the bird, they say it predicts a fair summer and a prosperous harvest. If the dove halts or is irregular in its movement, they expect a stormy season with disastrous frost and hail.

To them the Easter dove is a sacred and supernatural creature, and her flight seems that of a living bird. In reality, at a given moment, a match is applied to a fuse in the tail of the plaster dove, so that inevitably it starts off along the rope, pouring forth a plume of fire. At the end of the rope her flames ignite a fuse inserted in the carro that "sets off," the explosive works. Borne along by the still burning fuse, the dove whizzes over the rope until it reaches its perch again on the pole by the altar, where the fuse having burned out, it remains stationary.

It would be interesting to know the exact origin of this strange ceremony. Probably it is in some way connected with that custom of the Eastern church, where all the fires are extinguished on Good Friday, to be lighted again with fresh fire struck with flint and steel by the bishop on Easter day. In the Church of the Holy Sepulcher at Jerusalem on Easter day the new fire, after it has been kindled and blessed by the patriarch, is thrown down from the top of the dome and all the domestic hearths as well as all the tapers in the churches are lighted from it.

The Hearths Lighted From It.

In Florence this custom of the Eastern church was kept up for many years in the form of the populace relighting its hearth fires from tapers ignited at the consecrated fire in the cathedral. Some say that the dove was devised as an appropriate and impressive means of conveying the Easter outside the Duomo. It prevented the scrambling and fighting within the sacred edifice to procure the consecrated flames. At first the dove lighted a huge bonfire of wood in the square. But now the holy bonfire has degenerated into an exhibition of fireworks at midday, and no hearth fires are kindled from it as in ancient times.

But according to one old Florentine legend the origin of the white pigeon and the carro on Easter eve is given as follows:

In the crusading host of Godfrey de Bouillon was a Florentine knight, who was the first to climb the walls of Jerusalem and plant thereon the holy cross. To his native city he immediately sent the tidings, viz., a carrier pigeon, and the Florentines thus received the news of the recovery of the holy sepulcher long before it was known in any other European city.

Still another story is told about this same Florentine knight. Resolved to bring back to Florence the sacred flame that burnt in the Church of the Holy Sepulcher he lighted a torch from it and started to ride back to Italy. But in order to protect his torch from the wind he rode with his face toward the tail of the horse, thus screening the flame with his body. The country folk who saw him riding by in this strange manner shouted "Pazzi!! Pazzi!" (Fool! Fool!) and this name was proudly borne by his family ever afterward. As the Pazzis of Florence paid, for many generations all the expense of the carro on Easter even, it would seem that the strange ceremony owned its origin in some way to their distinguished ancestors.

Our children need to be practiced in the discrimination between right and wrong; their consciences do not merely inquire to awakened, but to be taught. They need to be taught the difference between obstinacy and firmness, between rude insolence and manly frankness, between a servile compliance with other people's wishes and courtesy; between real strength and violence, between honorable thrift and covetousness, between a liberal, generous temper and prodigality.—The Rev. Do we labor under a misapprehension when we express the belief that we are living in an epoch in which the things that are seen greatly dominate at least with no small porportion of the educated community? Is it not, in an unwelcome degree, a period in which faith is suspended? True, the sympathy and the sorrow evoked when Whittier and Tennyson bade us an earthly adieu, was gracious assurance that the things of faith and the spiritual life were not fully in the shadow as we had feared. Yet unmistakably the criticism that makes a vacuum and nothing but a vacuum, the philosophy that ministers to doubt rather than to trust and hope, are making of the present an Augustan age. We should bravely look at the situation and know the worst. Yet the lesson of the past, of many cases in the past, comes with assurance. If faith is in an eclipse, it must be that ere long the obscuration shall pass away. We give an affirmative answer to the question, will the history repeat itself?—Boston Christian Leader.

LIGHTNING STRUCK HIS KITE.

The Electro Fluid Ran Down the Cord Into the Boy's Body, but Did Not Kill Him.

Kite-flying is usually considered a harmless amusement, but that it is not always such is sufficiently proved by the recent experience of a thirteen year old boy at Cateau, near Cambray France, who became while indulging in this sport, an involuntary imitator of the immortal Franklin. The lad, whose name was Janti, was flying his kite—a small one, about twenty-seven inches long. It had reached a great height when a thunder storm was seen approaching.

The boy at once began to haul in his cord. The kite, however, was still 100 yards or so above the earth when there was a brilliant flash of lightning. Young Janti was thrown into the air, made two or three somersaults and fell ten or twelve feet away. The kite had attracted the electric fluid, which followed the cord, as in Franklin's famous experiment, and descended into the earth through the boy's body. Wonderful to relate the boy was not killed. After a little he arose and made his way home, trembling and crying. The nails of his left hand, which had held the string, were turned blue, as if by a terrible bruise while the fingers were burned and covered with blisters. (Besides, this, his face was bruised considerably by his fall. The kite-string was burned in two by the discharge and the kite, released, flew away to parts unknown.

Printing Bank of England Notes.

The notes are printed in a long narrow printing room, in which a dozen machines of similar construction are in full action. Their denominations vary from £5 to £1000, the largest note now printed. They cost about two-thirds of 1c each. A single impression completes the note, specially numbered, dated and signed by the cashier. The notes are delivered in pairs, slid upon a small table at the back of the press, where an employe stands to examine each one, and see that it is correctly numbered and perfectly printed. The numbers run backward, so that each bundle of 10,000 lie in their natural order when they are taken away. Thus, the two notes on each sheet are numbered, say 67168 and 77168, and the next pair are 67167 and 77167. The bundles are cut in two by an ordinary cutter, and it thus happens that every Bank of England note has three rough edges and one clean one. Great reliance, as a check upon counterfeiting, is placed upon the paper itself, the engraving, as compared with the American banknote standard, being less elaborate. The paper, specially made from pure linen rags, is strangely thin and remarkably tough. It has a peculiar shade of whiteness impossible to describe, and is printed in indelible ink of a special manufacture. The paper is made by a secret process at a special mill, which, time out of mind, has been the property of the Portal family. The note to-day is practically the same as it ever has been, and its apparent simplicity, offers a great temptation to counterfeiters out of employment.—McClure's Magazine.

The Pulse and the Handwriting.

In connection with the trial of Capt. Dreyfus, the Paris correspondent of the Daily News writes: "What Dreyfus said about the judgment of experts on handwriting proves right. Four such experts were summoned. Two of them declared that the document was not written by Dreyfus, one that he could not form any decided opinion, and only the fourth that the document was written by the prisoner. The opinion of Dr. Bertillon, who is known as the inventor of the anthropometrical system, decided the matter. Dr. Bertillon claims to have discovered a new process for identifying handwriting. It is based on the measurement of the beatings of the pulse, which are said to have in everybody a different and thoroughly characteristic effect on the handwriting. The inventor is said to enlarge the specimens by photography, till the letters are a foot high, and then the characteristic marks are seen."

Spring Medicine

Or, in other words, Hood's Sarsaparilla, is a universal need. If good health is to be expected during the coming season the blood must be purified now. All the germs of disease must be destroyed and the bodily health built up. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the only true blood purifier prominently in the public eye to-day. Therefore Hood's Sarsaparilla is the best medicine to take in the spring. It will help wonderfully in cases of weakness, nervousness and all diseases caused by impure blood. Remember

"My little girl has always had a poor appetite. I have given her Hood's Sarsaparilla, and since I have given it to her she has had a good appetite and she looks well. I have been a great sufferer with headache and rheumatism. I have taken Hood's Sarsaparilla. I am now well and have gained in strength. My husband was very sick and all run down. I decided to give him Hood's Sarsaparilla and he began to gain, and now he has got so he works every day." Mrs. Annie Dunlap, 385 E. 4th St., S. Boston, Mass. Get only Hood's, because

Bread and Butter Tree.

The French territory on the Gaboon river is celebrated for (among other things) its "bread and butter trees." They belong to the Irvingia species and grow abundantly in that district. The butter, an oleaginous substance extracted from the tree, is called cay cay by the natives. It is palatable and nourishing—considerably superior to much of the "pure butter," consumed in this country.

The bread is made from the seeds, which contain fatty matter to the extent of from 78 to 80 per cent., of weight, and of this about 18 per cent., is albumen. Bread made from these seeds is consequently very nutritious.

The tree is held in high esteem, and there is some talk of making an attempt to acclimatize it in Europe.

Justice—You are accused of resisting a police officer.

Toots—Then I plead guilty to insanity.

Like an open book, our faces tell the tale of health or disease. Hollow cheeks and sunken eyes, listless steps and languorous looks tell of wasting debilitating disease some place in the body. It may be one place or another, the cause is generally traceable to a common source—impure blood, and impure blood starts in the digestive organs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery purifies the blood, stimulates digestive action, searches out disease-germs wherever they exist and puts the whole body into a vigorous, strong and healthy condition. It builds up solid, useful flesh, rubs out wrinkles, brightens the eyes and makes life really worth living.

Sealing in Labrador.

Late in February the Newfoundland sealing steamers break through the ice in St. John's harbor, and make their way to some northern outposts, lying there until March 10, the earliest date on which the law allows them to "go to the ice." They stand out to sea until they meet the immense fields of ice from the Arctic Ocean. These fields are often many square miles in extent, and fairly teem with seals. A great seal hunter told me that the sea seemed suddenly converted into an ocean of seals and ice. The steamer breaks into the jam and floes with it or skirts along the edge, the crew, 200 or 300 in number, taking to the floating ice and living there for days and nights.

The young seals fatten so rapidly that sealers say you can actually see them grow while you are looking at them. The poor creatures are easily killed, a blow with the butt end of a gaff finishing them. The hunter then "sculps," or skins them, inserting a sharp knife under the fat, and with marvelous dexterity taking off the "pelt"—skin and fat together—in about a minute and a half. A party of men will "pan" their pelts—pile them up to the number of 1,000—and thrust a gaff with the ship's flag into the pan. When there are pans enough, the steamer breaks into the ice and hauls them aboard with a donkey-winch; or the men drag them to the vessel's side.

The Newfoundland seal-hunters always speak of seals as "swiles," and for our word carry they say "spel." A schoolmaster who had been listening to a seal-hunter's story, said sneeringly:

"Swiles! How do you spell swiles?"

"We don't spell 'em," replied the hunter, "we most generally hauls 'em!"—Gustav Kobbe in St. Nicholas.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

WORK OF THE MINNESOTA LAWMAKERS.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings in the Senate and House, Comprising a Brief Summary of the Week's Business.

St. Paul, April 12. — The senate adopted Senator Greer's resolution intended to lessen the evils of a crowded lobby.

A bit of capitol pleasantry was the opening feature of the senate's morning session. It was in the shape of a telegram from the citizens of Lakefield, Jackson county, to the president of the senate, as follows: "We hereby offer $1,000,000 for the location of the state capitol." Upon motion of Senator Yale the offer was referred to the finance committee to be killed.

Senator Stevens attempted to have the senate pass under suspension of the rules the house bill, H. F. No. 854, providing for a vote of the people upon the proposition whether they want a constitutional convention, which can not be held within four years even if the measure carries. Senator Greer suggested that the bill be placed at the head of general orders, and this was agreed to.

The senate and house committee on conference upon S. F. 388, the new codified banking bill, agreed upon an amendment which will permit officers of banks to borrow an amount equal to 10 per cent of the capital stock and surplus. Other borrowers may borrow 15 per cent, and the bill as it passed the senate allowed the bank officers to borrow only 5 per cent. The figure agreed upon is a compromise. The bill was passed as amended.

Hanna's bill to transfer $150,000 from the general fund to the internal improvement fund for country roads and bridges passed. The bill to establish an interstate park at the Dalles of the St. Croix was recommended for indefinite postponement. Young's bill to permit cylindrical boxes at elections was passed. Pottgeiser's bill fixing the term of office of judges of probate was lost. The bill relating to the deposit of city funds and defining the duties of city treasurers, connected therewith, specially intended to refer to St. Cloud, was defeated by a vote of 10 to 17. The house bill providing for two experiment stations was passed, as was Blagik's bill to provide for a bounty of 1 cent per pound upon beet sugar raised and manufactured in the state. Izer's bill providing for an amendment to section 4, article 5 of the constitution, defining the authority and duties of governor, and creating a board of pardons, lost by a vote of 14 to 23.

In the House.

The house put in nearly the entire morning session discussing the Jacobson chattel mortgage bill, which was taken from the table, then defeated it.

H. F. No. 161, which was recalled from the governor, was amended by its author, (Smith, E. E.) and passed again. It relates to the publication of the delinquent tax list.

Mr. Staples took from the table and passed H. F. No. 854, providing for the submission of a constitutional convention. The bill provides for the calling of the convention by the next legislature in case the people approve of the convention at the next election.

In the afternoon the consideration of the Calendar occupied the entire session and twenty-three house files were sent to the senate. Only two bills were defeated—H. F. No. 527, to limit the time for commencing actions, which was defeated by a vote of 55 to 33. Mr. Johns gave notice of reconsideration, and the bill will doubtless pass when there are more members in their seats. The second bill defeated was H. F. No. 735—Furlong—a proposed constitutional amendment relating to the appropriation of money for the internal improvement fund. The vote was 48 to 45.

St. Paul, April 13.—The judiciary committee submitted to the house the majority and minority reports in the matter of the proposed impeachment of Judge Frank Ives, of the Fourth judicial district, and without reading they were sent to the printer in order that they might be placed on members' desks by to-morrow night, when the house will consider the reports and arrive at a conclusion concerning the matter of impeachment. The committee stands 9 to 8 for impeachment.

The minority report discusses the various charges against Judge Ives, and in conclusion says:

"We, upon our conscience, cannot concur in the conclusions arrived at by the majority, nor can we, upon our conscience, report in favor of impeaching Judge Ives upon any or either of the aforesaid charges or matters specified in the report of the majority. We, therefore, recommend to this honorable body the adoption of the following resolution;

"Resolved, by the house of representatives now in session, That the matter of impeachment of Frank Ives of the 14th judicial district, be and the same is hereby dismissed, and that all further proceedings in said matter be dismissed."

The majority report says in conclusion:

"Your committee find from the evidence and the conclusions stated that the said Frank Ives has arbitrarily and tyrannically exercised the powers of his office in disregard of the rights and liberties of citizens of the State of Minnesota and contrary to its constitution and laws. Your committee, therefore, recommend the adoption of the following resolution:

"Resolved, That Frank Ives, judge of the district court of the State of Minnesota, in and for the Fourteenth judicial district, be impeached for corrupt conduct in office, crimes and misdemeanors."

In the Senate.

In the senate the question whether the people of Minnesota shall vote upon the proposition for a constitutional convention was discussed immediately before adjournment. It came up in committee of the whole, with Senator Hale in the chair. Senator Stevens, who has championed the bill since it came from the house, had asked to have it passed under suspension of the rules, but there was considerable opposition, so it was required to pass through the various stages of consideration, and its place was at the head of general orders. It was recommended to pass—23 to 14.

The senate passed the Schurmeier prison labor bill with the compromise amendments under suspension of the rules.

A lively little spat occurred when the unfavorable report of the railroad committee on S. F. No. 100 was made. This is Senator Knatvold's bill, fixing a maximum rate on coal, lead, copper and iron ore of 50 cents per ton for the first 100 miles' haul and 40-100 of a cent per ton per mile for distances in excess of 100 miles. The author moved that, notwithstanding the adverse report, the bill be printed and placed on general orders. When an aye and nay vote was taken it was decided to put the bill on general orders. The vote was 26 to 16, but this does not indicate that the bill has any prospect of becoming a law.

House Proceedings.

In the house the calendar was cleaned up, and of the thirty-one bills, twenty-nine passed, one was defeated, and one, the Wright "blacklisting" bill, was returned to the head of general orders.

St. Paul, April 14.—When the house was called to order last night to consider the Ives case the report of the majority was first read and then Mr. Underleak, chairman of the judiciary committee, moved its adoption. In so doing he dwelt upon the importance of the duty intrusted to the committee in investigating the charges, and spoke of the character of the committee's labors. The only aim of the committee had been to arrive at the truth. The real question before the house was the sufficiency of what the committee had to present as a report, as both minority and majority agreed as to the evidence. In its action it was to be hoped that the house would take this evidence as it was offered and explained by the members of the majority and treat it as dispassionately as it deserved. But in so doing its great importance must not be forgotten, nor its future effect.

The minority report was read at the request of Mr. Gibbs. Mr. Johns then began his speech in favor of the majority report, and was followed by Mr. Hartshorn for the minority report. These were the leading speeches. After several others had spoken the house decided to postpone action until to-night.

Senate Proceedings.

In the senate a resolution was adopted providing for the investigation of a report that the surgeon at the Stillwater prison wrongfully amputated the arm of a convict named James O'Neill.

Senator Keller introduced a bill, S. F. No. 738, to amend the recently enacted law defining what shall be the requirements of a legal newspaper. The recent law, S. F. No. 499, requires that a legal newspaper shall be published in the English language, and this fact had escaped the attention of Senator Keller, and his bill eliminates the word English. He moved to have his bill passed under suspension of the rules, and he made a vigorous speech in advocacy of his motion.

On motion of Senator Howard the vote by which Dr. Izer's board of pardon bill was killed was reconsidered and the bill was placed on general orders.

Without debate Senator Sheehan's bill authorizing cities to contract with private companies for a water supply was recommended to pass. The house bill appropriating $50,000 for drainage in the Red river country passed.

In the House.

The house put in another full day and business was pushed by the chairman while general orders were being considered. Mr. Jacobson kept things moving while he was in the chair during the morning session, and Mr. Gibbs during the afternoon made an equally good record as a business expediter.

On motion of Mr. Douglas the senate primary election bill was made a special order for next Thursday afternoon.

There was quite a fight over the Wright "blacklisting" bill and it was finally amended by striking out section 4, and amending the title to conform to the bill as amended. Section 4 is as follows:

"Section 4. Any labor union or labor organization, or member thereof, who shall prevent any one not a member of any labor organization or union from accepting work or preventing them from working when they so desire, shall be punished by the same penalty as provided in section 5."

Bills Passed—Miller—Fixing general terms of the district court in the Thirteenth judicial district.

Shell and Douglas—For the inspection of hay; etc.

St. Paul, April 16. — In the senate Senator Ozmun's primary election law, or the law that abolishes primaries in the three large cities of the state was postponed indefinitely and killed by a large majority of those present and voting.

Senator Knatvold presided over the afternoon session of the committee of the whole when the insurance bill was considered.

There was a little spat over an amendment to section 85, providing for a tax for a salvage corps. In the end an amendment was adopted. The bill was then approved section by section, including the 118th and last. The committee then considered section 54, changing the form of the standard policy, and which had been passed over during Friday's session. This was amended to incorporate the valued policy idea. The salary section was changed so the commissioner will receive $2,500 and his deputy $1,800, the clerk $720 and $480 for a contingent fund. The bill was then approved.

The senate judiciary committee by a vote of 7 to 6 decided that the Mellick bill, H. F. No. 264, for the prevention of restraint of trade in food products was unconstitutional.

Senator Iltis introduced a bill to appropriate $1,200 to purchase a portion of the battle field of Birch Coulie in Renville county, about one and one-half miles from the present monument; move the monument thereto, and correct the inscription on the monument "in particular to show that Mayor Joseph R. Brown, of the state militia, was in general command of the state's forces and that Capt. H. P. Grant, of Company A, Sixth regiment, Minnesota infantry, and Capt. Joseph Anderson, of the Cullen Frontier Guards, were in subordinate command of companies at and in the battle of Birch Coulie."

House Proceedings.

The house did not meet Saturday night and the Ives matter went over.

The mill of the house ground a generous grist. Seven of the bills on the calendar, including the McKenney meat inspection and the McInnis limitation of actions bills, were passed.

The age of consent bill was amended and sent to the calendar; Senator Morgan's coercion bill was also placed on the calendar after a warm fight, which resulted in the defeat of the house judiciary committee's amendments. The bill now on the house calendar is the original senate file. The Downs bill relating to newsboys was defeated. There was quite a heated debate over Mr. Brevig's bill relating to newspaper subscriptions, and it was finally recommended to pass. The text of the measure follows:

"No person who has subscribed and paid for the delivery of a copy or copies of a newspaper or any other publication for a specified length of time shall be held liable for any copy or copies of such newspaper delivered to him after the expiration of such time, unless he shall have again subscribed or contracted therefor."

JEALOUSY THE CAUSE.

A Bohemian Shoots Two Men and Suicides.

Cleveland, Ohio, April 16. — At 4 o'clock this morning John Sejbar, a Bohemian laborer aged 28 years, shot and instantly killed Carl Richter, aged 35, and fatally wounded Albert Richter, aged 22, the brother of the first victim. Two hours later the murderer was found dead in a cell at the central police station, where he had been taken after his arrest.

The shooting occurred at 90 Poplar street. Carl Richter, with his brother Albert and his wife and five children, lived at that number. Sejbar lived in the rear in a house owned by the Richters. Yesterday afternoon Sejbar drew his week's salary and on his way home he purchased a revolver and a pair of shoes for his wife. When he reached home he gave the shoes to his wife, telling her that it was the last pair he would ever buy her, as he was going away. In the evening he went over to Richter's house and there he met the two Richters and August Schlegel. They sent out for a keg of beer and began to drink. The merry-making continued until long after midnight. Once or twice Sejbar referred to his new revolver, and once he went to the door, firing two or three shots into the yard to show his companions that the weapon was all right. Shortly after 4 o'clock in the morning he started to go, but one of the Richters asked him why he was in a hurry, grabbing him by the coat collar and trying to prevent his going. Sejbar went, but soon returned and asked why he had been pulled about in that way. What followed can only be guessed at, but he evidently opened fire on Carl Richter first. One bullet passed through his arm and two struck him in the neck and he must have been killed instantly. Sejbar then shot Albert Richter in the neck, making an ugly wound, after which he left the house. He was arrested, and later hanged himself in his cell. Jealousy was the cause.

HAYWARD IN COURT.

Briefs on the Motion for a New Trial Were Submitted.

Minneapolis, April 16. — Harry T. Hayward, condemned to hang for the murder of Catherine Ging, was brought up from the jail to the little criminal court room to listen to the argument for a new trial in his case. He appeared very little altered in appearance from what he was at the close of his long and tedious trial, except that he was a trifle heavier and more prone to fat.

Assistant County Attorney Hall appeared for the state, and W. W. Erwin and Messrs. Shumacker and Sweetser were on hand to do honor for the prisoner. The wonderful No. 13 again figured in the case, for aside from the date being April 13 there were thirteen law books on the long green table.

Mr. Erwin explained that he had served his briefs upon the county attorney and the return brief had been submitted to him. He stated that the points taken were few, and chiefly covered the discretion of the court.

It was agreed by counsel that the briefs should be submitted without argument, and they were taken by the court.

FOR ROBBING A MINT.

On This Charge Is John T. Jones Arrested at Carson.

Carson, Nev., April 16. — John T. Jones was arrested this afternoon on complaint of Special Agent Harris, charged with taking $77,000 from the mint. Bail was fixed at $20,000. Henrick, another suspect in San Francisco, has hired W. W. Foote to defend him. Jones gave bail, with H. M. Yerington, ex-Gov. Colcord, John Rosser and Leslie Bell as sureties. Four more complaints are on file. The preliminary examination comes off Thursday before Judge Hawley.

War Veteran Dead.

Milwaukee, April 16.—Col. Colwert K. Pier, one of the best known war veterans in Wisconsin, died suddenly of apoplexy. Col. Pier was the son of Edward Pier, the first white settler at the location of Fond du Lac. Col. Pier was a lawyer, and his widow and daughters have all been admitted to the bar. Col. Pier was the first volunteer in the rebellion from Fond du Lac, and took a conspicuous part at the battle of the Wilderness with Gen. Grant, where he won a promotion to lieutenant colonel, afterward being detailed on court martial duty at Washington, D. C., where he was mustered out, in 1865.

Shot His Daughter.

Black River, Falls, Wis., April 16.—While J. E. Steadman, a prominent farmer twelve miles from here, was moving a gun, it was accidentally discharged, the entire charge of buckshot striking his daughter Elizabeth in the back of the neck, killing her instantly.

Illinois Capitol Scorched.

Springfield, Ill., April 16.—Fire broke out in the senate wing of the state house, and, fanned by a fierce gale, raged over an hour and caused a damage of $25,000.

ON SOUND INANCES.

PRESIDENT CLEVELAND WRITES A LETTER TO CHICAGO MEN.

In Replying to an Invitation to Make a Speech in Chicago, the President Makes a Plea in Behalf of Sound Money.

Washington, April 16. — President Cleveland has written a reply to the invitation to attend a reception in Chicago to express appreciation of the president's stand on financial questions. The president, after regretting his inability to be present, says in part:

"I hope the event will mark the beginning of an earnest and aggressive effort to disseminate among the people safe and prudent financial ideas. Nothing more important can engage the attention of patriotic citizens, because nothing is so vital to the welfare of our fellow-countrymen and to the strength, prosperity and honor of our nation. The situation demands that those who appreciate the importance of this subject and those who ought to be the first to see impending danger should no longer remain indifferent or over-confident. If the sound money sentiment abroad in the land is to save us from the mischief and disaster it must be crystalized and combined and made immediately active. It is dangerous to overlook the fact that a vast number of our people with scant opportunity, thus far, to examine the question in all its aspects, have nevertheless been ingeniously pressed with specious suggestions which in this time of misfortune and depression find willing listeners prepared to give credence to any scheme which is plausibly presented as a remedy for their unfortunate condition. What is now needed more than anything else is a plain and simple presentation of the argument

In Favor of Sound Money.

In other words, it is a time for the American people to reason together as members of a great nation which can promise them a continuance of protection and safety only so long as its solvency is unsuspected, its honor unsullied and the soundness of its money unquestioned. These things are all exchanged for the illusion of a debased currency and groundless hope of advantages to be gained by a disregard of our financial credit and commercial standing among the nations of the world. In these restless days the farmer is tempted by the assurance that though our currency may be debased, redundant and uncertain, such a situation will improve the price of his products, let us remind him that he must buy as well as sell; that his dreams of plenty are shaded by the certainty that if the prices of the things he has to sell is nominally enhanced, the cost of the things he must buy will not remain stationary; that the best prices which cheap money proclaims are unsubstantial and elusive, and that even if they were real and palpable, he must necessarily be left far behind in the race for their enjoyment. It ought not to be difficult to convince the wage-earner that if there were benefits arising from a degenerated currency they would reach him least of all and last of all. It is utterly impossible that any one in our broad land, rich or poor, whatever may be his occupation, and whether dwelling in a center of finance and commerce, or in a remote corner of our domain, can be really benefitted by not alike beneficial to all our people, or that any one should be excluded from a common and universal interest in the safe character and stable value of the currency of the country. The discredit or depreciation in financial centers of any form of money in the hands of the people is a signal of immediate loss everywhere. If reckless discontent and wild experiment should sweep our currency from its safe support the most defenseless of all who suffer in that time of distress and national discredit will be the poor, as they reckon the loss in their scanty support, and the laborer and workman as he sees the money he has received for his toil shrink and shrivel in his hand when he tenders it for the necessaries to supply his humble home. Disguise it as we may, the line of battle is drawn between the forces of safe currency and those of silver monometallism. I will not believe that if our people are afforded an intelligent opportunity for sober second thought they will sanction schemes that however cloaked mean disaster and confusion, nor that they will consent, by undermining the foundation of a safe currency, to endanger the beneficent character and purposes of their government."

AFTER THE HOMESTAKE.

One Suit Against It Dismissed and Another Immediately Brought.

Sioux Falls, S. D., April 16.—To-day on motion of Assistant United States Attorney Carland, the case of the United States vs. The Homestake Mining Company was dismissed. Immediately a new complaint was filed charging the defendant with cutting 119,792 cords of government timber in 1891 and 1892, valued at $688,804. The case will be tried here in October.

Two Big Fires.

Plattsburg, Mo., April 16. — A fire started to-day in the Stenum livery barns and spread rapidly. The fire is still burning fiercely. Among the buildings burned is the court house. After the receipt of the above dispatch telegraphic communication with the town was cut off.

Glen Carbon, Ill., April 16.—The St. Louis press brick works here were partially destroyed by fire to-day. The loss is about $300,000.

"What Are We Here For?"

El Paso, Tex., April 16. — Webster Flanigan, ex-collector of customs at this port, generally known as "What-are-we-here-for" Flanigan, is on trial, charged with assisting A. S. Dawson to smuggle 20,000 sheep from Mexico.

Murder and Suicide.

New York, April 16.—Charles Junda, aged 20, a Bohemian tailor, shot and instantly killed his sister-in-law, Mrs. Camilla Janda, and then committed suicide by shooting himself while standing in the door.

TWO GIRLS KILLED.

Bloody Work in a Church in San Francisco.

San Francisco, April 16. — The Emanuel Baptist church, at Bartlett street, between Twenty-second and Twenty-third, in this city, has been the scene of two of the most atrocious murders ever committed in the state. Yesterday the mutilated body of Minnie Williams was found in the library of the edifice. To-day the nude body of Blanche Lamont was found in the tower of the same church. The same hand, the authorities believe, slew both girls, and W. H. T. Durant, the young man suspected of both crimes, is now in custody.

Blanche Lamont and Minnie Williams were members of the Emanuel church, and members of the Sunday school class. The former was a student in the normal school, on Powell street, in this city; the latter was a companion in a family in Alameda, across the bay from the city. They were both twenty-one years old, brunettes and pretty and modest girls. Both had been the recipients of attentions from a young medical student named W. H. T. Durant, who is also the librarian of the church and the secretary of the Young People's society of the church. On April 3 Miss Lamont disappeared. Diligent search failed to reveal any trace of her whereabouts, and her aunt, Mrs. Noble, with whom she had been living, was totally unable to throw any light upon the affair. Miss Lamont came from Dillon, Mont. several months ago, having been in San Francisco for her health and at the same time to attend the normal school to perfect herself as a teacher. The last person seen in her company was W. H. T. Durant, who, it seems, had been on friendly terms with the missing girl. Yesterday about 11:10 p. m. the mutilated body of Minnie Williams was found in the library of the church. The girl had been assaulted and her remains were cut and hacked, the girl having evidently died from loss of blood. On further examination it was found she had been gagged, the assailant tearing part of her underclothing and thrusting it down her throat with a sharp stick, badly lacerating the tongue.

Miss Lamont's Body Found.

Late last night the detectives had about decided Durant had murdered Miss Williams, and this theory was further strengthened this morning after making a thorough search of the Emanuel church. The dead and outraged body of Miss Lamont was found concealed in the steeple. Death had been caused by strangulation. The body was lying just inside the door of the tower room nude and on the floor. Around the neck were marks of fingers that had been pressed deep into the tender flesh. The mouth was open showing the teeth, the features were badly distorted, being drawn, and the lips were swollen and blood-stained. The nose was the only feature that retained its original shape, for the cheeks were bloated. The girl's hair was matted with dirt and hung loosely about her shoulders. The body was badly decomposed, the odor emanating from the remains having reached the nostrils of the detectives before they opened the door. When the officers reached the top of the stairs they found the door leading to the tower dome locked. They broke in the door. It was so dark they could not see, and one of the officers struck a match and when the light flared up they saw before them the dead body of the girl for whom they had been searching. The body was taken to the morgue where it was placed on a slab by the side of Miss Williams. Durant has been arrested. In his possession was Miss Williams' purse. It is believed that he has a mania for murdering girls.

Fatality at a Bull Fight.

Barcelona, April 16.—In the course of a bull fight here to-day the enraged bull jumped over the barriers and among the spectators. A wild rush was at once made for the exits and in the stampede many persons were injured. The employes of the bull ring made an attempt to capture the bull, but they could not get him, and finally a civil guard fired at him with his carbine, killing the animal and one of the spectators. As soon as it was known that the bull was dead the spectators hurried to their seats and the entertainment proceeded as though nothing out of the ordinary had happened.

Sells Booze to Indians.

Milwaukee, April 16.—Fred Goethe, a Green Bay saloonkeeper, has been arrested the fourth time on charges of selling liquor to Indians. Each case has been continued when it came up in court on the application of ex-Congressman T. R. Hudd, who represents him as counsel. Mr. Hudd contends that Goethe has a right to sell liquor to Indians off the reservation; that as a result of the allotment they have the same rights as any other citizen, and he proposes to make this a test case by taking an appeal should the decision go against him in the lower court.

Warm Welcome Promised.

Denver, April 16.—On their arrival in Denver to-morrow morning ex-Congressman Sibley, Senator Jones and Gen. Warner will be met by a reception committee at the head of which will be Gov. McIntyre and Mayor McMurray. A reception will be given to the visitors at the Brown Palace hotel in the evening, for which elaborate arrangements have been made. Gov. McIntyre will welcome the visitors to the state, and one of them will reply. Tuesday afternoon an open air meeting will be held. Special trains will be run from all over the state, and it is expected from 20,000 to 25,000 people will be present.

First Run of Logs.

Black River, Falls, Wis., April 16.—The first new logs passed down the river to-day. They have been running steadily all day. Millions of feet have passed, heavy rains on the upper branches causing the rise. All the booms at Onalaska are full.

It is with pleasure that we can announce the end of the Ives impeachment case before the legislature. The decisive majority of 80 to 17 in favor of dismissal clearly showed that the state of Minnesota is not a state where the criminal classes can run the courts, All friends of good government were with the Judge in the fight regardless of politics and the futile attempt of the prosecutors to induce the Republicans to make it a party issue was a dismal failure as the prominent Republicans repudiated this brilliant scheme of our lawless element.

The legislature has decided to give a bonus of one cent a pound upon all sugar raised in the state providing that over 500 pounds are produced by any one resident." The bill is intended to encourage the raising of sugar beets and the production of beet sugar. Now if some enterprising individual will give us a sugar beet factory or a local syndicate can be formed for its manufacture our farmers may make a good thing out of beets. It has been a very profitable crop elsewhere and no doubt factories will be built in this state, but some are apt to seek the Red River Valley, although, as a matter of fact we can beat the world raising root crop and the sugar beet is no exception. They have been grown here all ready as an experiment and they attained a wonderful size —Norman County Index,

The attempt on the part of a few political enemies to punish a Judge of the District Court of Minnesota, because of his zeal in prosecuting criminals in East Grand Forks, by attempting the impeachment of the Judge, fell flat last night when at about midnight the house of Representatives, by a vote of 80 to 17 adopted the minority report of the Judiciary Committee, which practically exonerates Judge Ives from improper conduct and any criminal intent, in the case presented against him before the legislature,

It happens that Judge Ives was elected through the influence of the Peoples party, and thus has incurred the condemnation of both the old parties at this particular point in the Fourteenth Judicial District, The fight grew out of an effort on part of Judge Ives to have the saloon-men and gamblers of East Grand Forks obey the laws of the state, and to accomplish his purpose expressed the willingness to exercise his judicial authority in a lenient manner towards certain other persons of the criminal classes in East Grand Forks, Penny Press.

Cattle Pastured,

I have 300 acres of good pasture and will pasture cattle for $1.50 for the season and horses and colts for ,75 cts per month S. M. Dainard.

It is now discovered that the sale of seeds, books, maps and other congressional perquisities has been a rather common practice among the statesmen of our national legislature. One dealor received an order for 1,000 papers of vegetable seeds and filled it by buying of the clerks of congressmen at an average rate of one-fourth of a cent per paper. The same dealer says he has purchased a large quanity of agricultural reports during the past winter at an average price of 6 cents per copy. These books cost the government 40 cents a piece. The large maps of the United States furnished for distribution by the general land office are often sold for cash by the clerks of members and senators, This practice reminds one of the old carpet bag days when a congressman from one of the Carolinas, now a lawer in a western state, sold his appointment for a West Point cadetship for the small sum of $500, The matter was investigated by the house and the offender was expelled The congressman admitted the facts but said he did not think congress ough to mind a little thing like that. Crookston Times.

Will some of our readers solve the following problem; An American lived near the Mexican border line and entered a rum-shop, where of course, he called for a glass of whisky, the price of which was fifteen cents. He had in his pocket a Mexican dollar, which he handed to the bartender in payment for the whisky. The bartender hands back to him as change an American dollar which is worth but eighty-five cents in Mexico. The man came back into the states, entered a dramshop, called for a glass of liquor which was the same price, handed over the American dollar in payment and received back a Mexican dollar He kept this up, going back and forth across the line until nature gave out; whether it was from the quantity of the liquor, history does not say, at any rate the man was more dead than alive and had an American dollar in his pocket, being as well off as when he started. The question is: "Who paid for the whisky?,, —Ex.

that there was to be a premium on gold coin, these same banks would at once double padlock their gold chests and dole out paper or silver to depositors. The savings bank folk are particularly canny in looking after the uttermost farthing, and in this game of catch as catch can at the government gold heap they are a substantial backing to the operators in front.

The pretty game of seesaw for profit is well represented in the diagram presented. Starting at normal in March, 1888, the New York city banks are seen to have had $72,000,000 in specie. It was then a good sum, for there was but $80,000,000 in legal tender paper on hand, and the loan and deposit accounts were normal at $369,000,000 and $375,000,000 respectively.

The government vaults were bursting with $218,000,000 of gold. The bankers saw what was coming, and looked out for themselves. They held on to the coin deposited until the specie column had climbed to $129,000,000, with the poor government turning paper into gold until a meager $65,000,000 remained. Now was the time for a turn about. The bankers were bond buyers, and down went the legally useless heap of gold, up went the government's normal possession, and the date in March, 1894, was reached. The banks more than held their own. The government reserve sank lower than ever.

Then another whirl of the wheel of fortune, and the banks had in a twinkling over $10,000,000 less, and the government had once more that reassuring $100,000,000 and better.

What goes up must come down, says the old saw. It applies to government holdings, and the bank messengers stood in line to catch the rich drippings from the government crib, and today the situation of a year ago or more is repeated, with the banks of the city holding twice the amount of specie that the government has in net gold.

There are explanations without number to justify every step in this grand drama of giving nothing for something, of adding millions to the permanent debt of the country, simply for permitting a few gold coins with strings attached to rest awhile in the subtreasury vaults and figure a few times on the monthly statements of the secretary of the treasury.

While the figures presented take in only the New York city banks, they are really playing but a minor part in the gigantic performance. There are plenty of private vault owners of private banks here and abroad who are leaders in this queer exhibition of modern financial methods, and the growth of the gold reserve in the great governmental banks of Europe tells in some measure where the gold is drifting, and while the precious yellow coin is there, snug and sound, the United States government is going on paying interest rates to a merry band of bankers and financiers for the use of much of this very gold.

It certainly begins to look as though the men of money had discovered the long sought secret of perpetual motion and are applying it in their dealings with the United States treasury.—New York World.

They Are Curses to the Country.

Too much cannot be said against the men of wealth who sacrifice everything to getting wealth. There is not in the world a more ignoble character than the mere money getting American, insensible to every duty, regardless of every principle, bent only on amassing a fortune and putting his fortune only to the basest uses—whether these uses be to speculate in stocks and wreck railroads himself, or to allow his son to lead a life of foolish and expensive idleness and gross debauchery, or to purchase some scoundrel of high social position, foreign or native, for his daughter. Such a man is only the more dangerous if he occasionally does some deed like founding a college or endowing a church, which makes those good people who are also foolish forget his real iniquity. These men are equally careless of the workingmen, whom they oppress, and of the state, whose existence they imperil. There are not very many of them, but there is a very great number of men who approach more or less closely to the type, and, just in so far as they do so approach, they are curses to the country.—Forum.

Watson the Same as Ever.

Colonel Tom Watson was asked yesterday about the rumor that he did not want to make the race for congress again. He smiled at the thought.

"I did not want to make it the last time," said he, "but under the present circumstances I can't well see how the race could be run otherwise than between Mr. Black and myself. That was the fight before, and Mr Black resigned that we might try it over. I hardly see how I could put another man up to run in my place. The election, as I understand it, is to occur the first week in April, or within 30 days after March 4, when Mr. Black's resignation takes effect."

Is Mr. Watson hopeful? He is the same as ever.—Atlanta Constitution.

American Statesmanship.

As proof of the slipshod manner in which bills are passed in congress, it was discovered a few days since that Chairman Richardson of the printing committee had slipped in a provision giving senators and congressmen the franking privilege. No one seems to know how it was done; but, like the demonetization of silver, it is in the bill. Unless repealed it will plunder the government of a large amount of postal revenue. The worst feature is that the law gives each senator and member $25 for his postage and now lets him send his letters free. Great country this.

They Want It All.

If the national bankers of this country would put a fence around just what section of the United States they will be content with, other people might then be permitted to go on with business.—Boston Labor Leader.

THE DRUMMER'S COFFEE.

An Eastern Tenderfoot Taught a Lesson In Western Table Etiquette.

"The character of the typical denizen of the wild and lawless west," remarked Representative Mercer of Nebraska, "is not exactly gentle and childlike, but if you only know how to take it you're apt to escape with your life.

"It comes back to my memory in vivid colors as I sit here and sip this delicious cup of coffee that I witnessed a coffee drinking scene once upon a time under somewhat different and less emollient conditions. I struck a frontier town late one night, intending to do some business there and go on the next day. It was a lone town and a rough town, consisting of one main street, with about 15 scattered houses and a population which, according to report, was not averse to giving shelter to horses whose ownership was a matter of speculation. I asked the agent at the railroad station to direct me to a hotel. He pointed out a frame house in the pale moonlight, and I made for it. Everybody was asleep, but I pounded up the landlord, and he assigned me to a room adjoining the parlor and dining room combined, separated only by a curtain.

"It was frightfully cold, and the cracks in the walls of the hotel were large enough to enable one to enjoy an unobstructed view of the town in the moonlight, but there were plenty of buffalo robes and bearskins on the bed to keep warm, and I piled in among the fur.

"I couldn't go to sleep. Every now and then somebody would fire a six shooter and follow it up with a shrill 'yip-yip-yip!' that raised the goose flesh on my body. About 3 o'clock a. m. the shooting and yelling ceased, and I went to sleep.

"What awoke me was a conversation conducted in the dining room between two men with gruff voices. I parted the curtain of my room and saw two frontiersmen in flannel shirts, broad hats and high boots, with revolvers slung to their belts, discussing their breakfast at one end of the dining room table, while a well dressed stranger, apparently a drummer, who probably drove into town the night before, was sitting at the other end doing likewise. While the two knights of the lariat were talking together I saw the drummer push his cup of coffee away with a very sour face, as though it was poison.

"'What's the matter, stranger?' asked one of the men. 'Don't ye like that coffee?'

"'Naw,' said the drummer curtly. 'Tain't fit to drink.'

"Bang went the crack of a revolver, and the cup was shattered into a dozen pieces. One of the men had pulled his gun and without taking aim had shattered the cup and splashed the coffee every direction.

"The drummer didn't stop to finish his breakfast, but went out of the room in a hurry, and I wondered what sort of a breakfast I would get. I knew something about the ethics of western chivalry, however, and stepped into the room laughing.

"'What's the matter with that fellow?' I said, assuming to speak in my merriest mood. 'Isn't the coffee good enough for him? Pshaw, he doesn't know a good thing when it's set before him.'

"Well, somehow, my style took with them, and we were soon on such good terms that they wanted me to go out and take a drink with them, but I excused myself and escaped with my life."—Washington Post.

More Bonds.

The withdrawals of gold have been so unprecedentedly large that another bond issue within the next 40 days is now certain, says a Washington correspondent. This new loan coming at such an early date has probably affected the value of the bonds now offered. It may be the New York syndicate is anxious to have his loan deferred.

Foes of the Income Tax.

It is apparent from the statement of Senator Lodge that the Republican senators, allied with Mr. Hill, will make a bitter fight against the appropriation for the enforcement of the income tax law. They will do this on the demand of the multimillionaires of the east, who are always the loudest complainants against any failure to enforce laws that are for their benefit. Let a law touch their pocketbooks, and there is nothing that will not be done—perjury, bribery, anything—to stop its enforcement. And they can always count on the aid of Republican senators.—Indianapolis Sentinel.

EVERY HONORABLE VETERAN DESERVES HIS PENSION.

(From the Journal, Lewiston, Me.)

Samuel R. Jordan has just given the Journal an account of his life, which in view of his extremely hard lot for the past few years is of great interest.

"I am 48 years old and have always lived in New Portland. I enlisted in the army in 1862 as a private in Company A, Twenty-eighty Maine Volunteers. My army experience injured my health to some extent, although I worked at blacksmithing some part of the time, when suddenly, several years ago, I was prostrated with what able physicians pronounced Locomotor Ataxia. At first I could get around somewhat, yet the disease progressed quite rapidly until I had hardly any feeling in my legs and feet, they felt like sticks of wood, and I grew so much worse that I could not move for three years without help, as my neighbors and friends could testify. I employed several physicians in my vicinity, and elsewhere, and they all told me that medicines would not help me, that they could do nothing to effect a cure and that in time I should become entirely helpless. I became discouraged. I was a great care to my wife and friends. Shortly after I met an old army comrade, Mr. All. Parlin, a resident of Madison, Me., and he incidently mentioned how he had tried Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for a severe case of rheumatism and a spinal and malarial trouble, that he had suffered with consequent of his army life, and had been greatly benefited by their use. By his earnest recommendation I was induced to try the pills. After taking them for a time I began to feel prickly sensations in my legs and a return of strength so I could move them a little. After a few weeks I began to feel a marked improvement in my condition. I soon was enabled to walk around a little with the help of crutches. After taking for some time I can now walk without crutches, my general health is much improved and I have regained my old-time vigor. I can walk about and enjoy life once more, for which I feel very thankful, and this happy result is due to the use of Dr. Williams' Pink Pills."

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People were first compounded as a prescription and used as such in general practice by an eminent physician. So great was their efficacy that it was deemed wise to place them within the reach of all. They are now manufactured by the Dr. Williams' Medicine company, Schenectady, N. Y., and are sold in boxes (never in loose form by the dozen or hundred, and the public are cautioned against numerous imitations sold in this shape) at 50 cents a box, or six boxes for $2.50, and may be had of all druggists or direct by mail from Dr. Williams' Med. Co.

Boston is a queer city, anyway. The city architect wants his office abolished, as he thinks the city work should be done by competition.

The bank burglars got but 75 cents and some beneficial exercise out of the bank of Corder, Mo.

The Evolution

Of medical agents is gradually relegating the old-time herbs, pills, draughts and vegetable extracts to the rere and bringing into general use the pleasant and effective liquid laxative, Syrup of Figs. To get the true remedy see that it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only. For sale by all leading druggists.

Fishing is good now in Buffalo's water-pipes. Recently an employe of the water department, while flushing out a street hydrant, collected a string of good-sized perch and pike.

Great Northern Country.

The most complete publication so far issued in the interest of any Western railway is the new and beautifully illustrated book entitled the "Great Northern Country," which attractively and truthfully covers the territory from the great lakes to the Pacific ocean, traversed by the Great Northern railway. The work is really an edition de luxe and is being distributed among libraries, clubs, reading rooms and hotels, rather than for private use. It contains hundreds of fine views of scenery along the line, accompanied by well written descriptive matter, all of which must prove of value to the region so aptly shown up. The variety of useful and handsome printed matter and pictures now being issued by the Great Northern will compare in every particular with that of any road in the land.

It seems that there is one city in the world which not only escapes taxes, but pays a dividend on its inhabitants. This unique town is Gallnow, Hungary, which derives so much revenue from its woods, pastures and farms that the corporation furnishes citizens with free fuel. The most of the money comes from forests carefully guarded against waste.

Two hundred years ago last July the Bank of England started on a basis of a government debt to it of $5,000,000. The debt the government now owes the bank is $55,000,000.

RAIN AND SHINE.

Can't have sunshine all the time—
Got to come a rain;
The dry land, it gist thirsty,
An' the mountain an' the plain,
They cry out for a drop to drink,
An' all the wiltin' flowers
Is glad to see the rain fall free;
An' freshen with the showers.

Can't have sunshine all the time;
Glad fer rain to fall;
Fills the wells an' makes the dells
Look fresh an' sparklin'—all.
The raindrop makes the roses grow;
An' if the rivers rise
They water all the land, an' go
Jest singin' neath the skies!

Can't have sunshine all the time;
I like a rainy day;
Fer that's the time fer readin' books,
Or makin' fiddles play,
To home, or to the grocery store,
I'm happy when it rains;
Fer they need it on the mountains,
An', it's welcome on the plains!

A TIGHT FIT.

By the "Old Un."

Mrs. Lillian Lammerton, was a buxom widow, on the sunny side of thirty, with a fine house on Lexington avenue, and any amount of bank and other stocks standing in her name. She was not an inconsolable widow, for she was no hypocrite, and the departure to the world of spirits of her lord and master was the result of his familiarity with spirits (Jamaica) in this nether world. At the best of times, he was a brute; in his cups a monster. Few tears were shed for him. The widow wore weeds for a limited time, and then bloomed out in colors like a peony.

She had many suitors, but two among them made such running—to use sporting phraseology—that the rest of the field were nowhere. These two ran neck and neck in the race for the widow, and it was hard to tell which would be the winner of the beauty and the booty.

One of them was Mr. Mortimer Fitzeagle, a tall, blonde youth. He was always exquisitely dressed, and was a popular clubman. His rival was tall, also but with raven black hair, and a beard and mustache a Turk would have envied. His name was Hector Hammersley, and he was a lieutenant colonel of the gallant 2029th Regiment, New York State National Guard. He was a clubman too, and had hosts of friends. He had greatly distinguished himself in arms on several field-days, and was the hero of a victorious charge on an apple woman's stand in Tompkins Square on a parade day when the populace were turbulent and pippins had been projected at the head of the reviewing officer.

Now Mortimer Fitzeagle made up his mind to bring matters to a crisis on a certain decisive day, when he pitched upon long beforehand. Weeks in advance he had secured the promise of Mrs. Lammerton to take a drive with him and spend the forenoon in Central Park. There was a deep design in the selection of the day, for on that very day the gallant 2029th were to parade, and, as the colonel was a hopeless invalid, Hammersley was to command, and proposed marching the regiment through Lexington avenue and dipping the colors to the widow. Fitzagle knew very well that this would turn the scale in the colonel's favor, and so, with diabolical ingenuity, he contrived to flank him.

The day approached. The suit ordered of a fashionable tailor fitted Fitzeagle's graceful figure like a glove. When he tried it on and looked at himself in the mirror, a conquering hero smiled back on him.

Now for the boots. Particular charges had been given to Marvel, the constructor thereof, to make them easy, for Mortimer Fitzeagle had tender feet, and required to be daintily shod. The boots didn't come home till Mortimer's horses were at the door, and both the horses and the owner were stamping with impatience. But, then, the boots were so beautiful to behold, so symmetrical, so glittering that Mortimer checked his indignation and smiled blandly on Marvel, the boot maker, as with the aid of hooks and soapstone he coaxed upon the dandy's feet the triumph of art.

"Easy as a glove," said the bootmaker.

Fitzeagle sprang into his phaeton and drove to the widow's. She was soon seated beside him, and they were before long rolling through Central Park. The widow was all smiles. She laughed at Mortimer's wit; she sighed at his sentiment. She praised his horses; she was delighted with the bouquet he had presented to her.

"Would she lunch with him at Mount Saint Vincent?"

Of course she had no appetite, but might possibly nibble a bit of chicken.

Mortimer risked ordering a plentiful breakfast, and it was served in an arbor, and the waiter discreetly departed leaving the couple to themselves.

Meanwhile, Lieutenant-Colonel Hector Hammersley was in his glory. Never had the gallant 2029th turned out with fuller ranks. As they marched up Fifth avenue, with full company front, the muskets all dressed with precision, the intervals perfect, the colors glaring in the sun, the band braying, tooting, banging, and whanging, lovely eyes and lips smiled on the warriors, and lovely hands threw them bouquets.

But the gallant commander's heart was in Lexington avenue. As he neared the cross street that led toward the house where dwelt the lady of his love, he settled himself in his stirrups and grasped his battle blade with ardor. As the regiment was on the point of wheeling by the left flank, a line of coal carts were seen approaching in the opposite direction. Did the commander's heart sink at the danger? No! he galloped to the front, and menacing the drivers of the carts with his terrible saber, he made them draw close to the curb-stone. It was splendid to behold him reducing the front of his column. Like magic, it shrunk to a front of fours, without much more jostling, kicking of shins, and curses than might have reasonably been expected, and the obstacle was passed. A bootblack at the corner on which the regiment wheeled was so delighted that he shouted to the colonel:

"Shine your boots for nothing!"

They marched past the widow's house. The colonel looked up at the window of her drawing-room, smiled, and saluted with his sword. The blinds were closed, but a bit of white drapery shone through the slats. She was there then! Toot! toot! went the trumpets—slam bang! went the drums, and the colors gracefully inclining toward the house, bent in homage to the bowered (and dowered) beauty.

Then the adjutant tore madly along the column, threw his horse on his haunches, and saluted the colonel. Then the colonel saluted the adjutant and then the hoarse orders were bawled out, and the regiment was countermarched. As they passed the house a second time the lady at the window, who had had time to rush into the garden and gather a bouquet, threw open the blinds—but, alas! it was not the widow—it was her colored chambermaid who flung a bunch of sunflowers, hollyhocks, and dahlias with so true an aim that it struck the colonel full in the breast and nearly sent him from his saddle.

He called a halt, and certain gentlemen of the African persuasion who had been following in the rear with pails, and the warriors breaking ranks, drank and wiped their foreheads, and made campstools of their muskets, or squatted on curb-stones as the "soldier tired of war's alarm" is apt to do after a hard march when the girths of discipline are slacked.

Taking advantage of this lull, the colonel dismounted, inquired at the door, and ascertained where the widow was and in whose company. Then the brow of the warrior grew black and stormy, "and curled his beard for ire." He climbed into the saddle of his war-horse, and in tones that froze the marrow in the bones of his hearers, roared out:

"'Tention!"

In an instant order was born of chaos.

Standing up in his stirrups, the colonel yelled out:

"Forward! March!"

The band struck up "Such a Gettin' Up Stairs!" and at a quick step, the gallant 2029th were marched to their armory and dismissed. The colonel and his black servant to whom he committed the charge of his trusty saber, rode forth, like knight and squire of old—whither? The sequel will show.

Meanwhile the widow and Mortimer Fitzeagle were sitting under the arbor. Perhaps the reader may imagine that Fitzeagle was in the seventh heaven of a lover's paradise. Not much. The widow bestowed her sweetest smile on him, but he answered with a frown. She looked up in his face innocently, and he looked down on her with a savage grin.

Once, when looking at the landscape, the flowers, the birds, she murmured: "This is charming!" he roared out something which might have rhymed with salvation, but certainly had the contrary meaning.

The fact was that Mr. Marvel's "easy fit" was a swindle and a fraud. His boots had for a long time been pinching Mr. Fitzeagle's feet awfully; they crushed the toes, and the tighter they grasped them, the more the feet swelled; they bore down on his insteps, they tortured his heels. He had fiddled his feet together under the table in hopes of secretly loosening and removing them, but no human or mechanical power could have done this.

Finally the agony swamped every other feeling. It was a burning, crushing, racking agony. The victim ceased to think of the smiling beauty opposite—ceased to think of courtship and marriage; only thought how, if the bootmaker were there, he'd mash his head on the gravel with the very heels he had fabricated. So when the widow, startled at his oath that escaped his lips, asked severely: "Mr. Fitzeagle, what does this mean?" he answered in reference to the boots, as he stamped his tortured feet:

"Tight, ma'am—very tight."

"I have suspected it for a long time!" shrieked the widow, starting up. "Oh, is there nobody here to protect a lone woman?"

"Ay," replied a deep voice; "I am here to protect you!" and the lieutenant-colonel of the gallant 2029th rode up, dismounted, and flung his rein to his sable follower.

In her agitation, and it may be added, her delight, the widow threw herself on the manly breast of her military adorer. His left arm encircled her waist.

"Let go that lady!" yelled Mortimer, jumping to his feet though the effort was agony.

"Never!" replied the warrior. "Simmons my saber!"

The colored gentleman handed his master the familiar weapon.

"Oh! colonel, please don't take his life," cried the widow. "It might make a scandal—but take me away from him. He's a horrid wretch—lured me out here, and admitted that he was very tight."

"I tight!" shrieked Mortimer. "It's a mistake—only hear me, Lillian."

"Don't call me by my Christian name!" said the widow.

The wretched Mortimer caught hold of her dress, but the colonel raised his saber, eyed the hand viciously, and seemed only calculating how high up he should perform amputation, and so Mortimer left go his hold, pressed his hand to his head and sank back into his seat.

When he raised his head again, the warrior and the widow were gone.

Then he shouted:

"Come here, boys, and help me off with these infernal boots. Come one—come all—all Africa."

Two stout waiters responded to the call of the unhappy gentleman, and each seized a boot. Mortimer grasped the arms of the rustic chair on which he was sitting, and told them to pull. They pulled, Mortimer held back, and then, the boots refusing to yield the whole concern gave way and went down the hill, dandy, and colored gentlemen, all in a heap. But the waiters were up and at work again in a minute. They hauled Fitzeagle off his back over the gravel walks; they made him hold back by saplings, and now that their pride was interested, they grinned and showed their ivories and tugged and tore away till at last the vicious boots came off.

Then Mortimer became very quiet. He paid his colored friends, paid his bill, bought a pair of slippers of the barkeeper, had his boots wrapped up in a neat parcel, called for his phaeton, and drove home.

He stopped at the widow's in Lexington avenue, but though he heard her voice and the colonel's laughing and talking, he was informed that she was not at home. The next day he her a letter which was returned unopened. He inserted an advertisementfull of pathos and stars and initials in the Herald "Personals" informing the widow that if she would see him and beg his pardon all would be forgiven. No use. The colonel had cut him one and it was soon announced that Lieutenant-Colonel Hector Hammersley, of the gallant 2029th was about to lead to the hymeneal altar the charming Mrs. Lillian Lammerton, of Lexington avenue.

Now Mr. Mortimer Fitzeagle knew what his mission was.

He took a brown paper parcel and called on Mr. Marvel, the fashionable bootmaker. Mr. Marvel advanced to meet Mr. Fitzeagle all smiles. Mr. Fitzeagle opened the parcel and took out a pair of boots.

"You made these boots, I think, Mr. Marvel," he said, blandly.

"Yes, sir, with my own hands."

"You were sure of my measure?"

"My dear sir, I have your last."

"I think I requested you to make them perfectly easy, my friend."

"I recall your directions on that head, sir. I think your words were 'easy as a glove.'"

Whiz! went one boot at the head of the astonished Mr. Marvel. Whiz! went the other boot, which, taking him just below the ribs, had the effect of doubling him up.

Then Mr. Marvel, who was a man of spirit, squared off, and Mr. Fitzeagle, who was a man of science, squared off, and then and there they had it hot and heavy.

"You scoundrel!" roared Fitzeagle, "you've lamed me for life, and you've lost me a wife and fortune!"

"Run for a police!" shouted Mr. Marvel, to one of his journeymen.

The result of this "little unpleasantness" may be thus summed up: Mr. Marvel, minus one front tooth, plus one black eye. Mr. Fitzeagle minus one widow, weighing one hundred and sixty pounds, avoirdupois, and two hundred thousand dollars in real and personal estate, plus two corns and twenty-five dollars fine and costs. Lieutenant-Colonel Hammersley of the 2029th, won every point of the game. So much for a tight fit.

SULLIVAN'S OLD TRUNK.

Its Sale Last Week Recalled Some Tales of the Pugilist.

If the trunk belonging to John L. Sullivan ex-champion pugilist which was sold last week at Jacksonville, to satisfy a bar bill, could talk, what strange stories it might tell! They would hardly edify Captain Hawkins, of the Salvation Army, who bought the trunk for $4.75. Hawkins says he means to use as a horrible example of what drink would bring a man to. It must be the battered old thing, which visitors to the actor-pugilist's dressing room will remember well. Sullivan always had a liking for old friends, animate or inanimate. If he got fond of a coat he was apt even in the days when its pockets bulged with bank notes, to wear it till it fell to pieces. It was observed when he arrived in New Orleans on the eve of his Waterloo that he was dressed in a loose-fitting shabby old suit of blue serge, one he had worn all the while he was training. His hat was a battered specimen of the genus slouch, and he had on a flannel shirt and no tie. James J. Corbett, it was also observed at the same time, was dressed in garments fresh from the tailor. As one writer expressed it, "Pompadour Jim was dressed to kill." His clothes were of the latest fashionable cut. He had on a stand-up collar and a starched white shirt, a neat tie, and a silk hat. When he took off his gloves he displayed carefully manicured hands. About him hung a delicate perfume." The only perfume John L. was ever known to use came from a bottle across a bar and was taken internally.

Perhaps the trunk which is to be a Salvation Army property henceforth, contained the set of Indian clubs which came near bringing Sullivan's career to a sudden and inglorious close a year or two ago. Sullivan had been indulging in firewater pretty freely in Buffalo, where he was playing "The Man from Boston." When he got to his hotel, as his playful habit was when in liquor, he began to use his wife as a football. She got tired of the exercises after awhile, and when Sullivan called her an imp of darkness, whom he meant to permanently abate, she picked up an Indian club and whacked the noisy pugilist over the head with it. It put Sullivan to sleep quicker than any blow he ever got in the ring, and Mrs. Sullivan was frightened out of her wits, rang for help, a doctor came, and the big brute was put to bed. But his skull was thick enough to save him and he awoke the next morning none the worse. It was only one of the times that the false rumor went out that John L. had passed in his checks and all.

STAGE FRIGHT IN SPEAKERS.

A Vermont Governor Who Was Always at Ease Outside His Own State.

There are some speakers who never experience the least bit of trepidation before an audience, but from what I can learn this is the exception rather than the rule. A gentleman who has charmed many a Vermont audience by his mellifluous words informed me that he was frightened for the first time in his life while speaking after the witty and brilliant Depew at the recent banquet in Burlington. This is not to be wondered at, and I noticed that even the ready and self-possessed toastmaster appeared at his best after the chief orator had left the hall.

One of the best known governors that the Green Mountain State has had in late years told me recently that it bothered him somewhat to think that he could never get over being embarrassed when he addressed an audience. When he went out of the state to speak he said that he was more at ease, being in the presence of strangers, but when he appeared before an assemblage of Vermonters, many of whom he knew and who knew him, he spoke not without considerable trepidation.

His experience in this direction led him at one time to congratulate ex-Senator George F. Edmunds on the fact that the latter had appeared in public so much that he was perfectly at home when addressing an audience, but the congratulator was astonished to hear Mr. Edmund's reply: "You are mistaken. I never rise to my feet to speak without feeling more or less uncomfortable."—Burlington (Vt.) Free Press.

That Tired Feeling

Is a certain indication of impure and impoverished blood. If your blood could always be rich and pure, full of the red corpuscles upon which the vitality depends, you would never be weak, or Nervous! Boils, pimples, scrofula, salt rheum, would never trouble you. But our mode of living, shut in all winter in poorly ventilated homes and shops, depletes the blood and there is loss of appetite, and weakness. Hood's Sarsaparilla is the standard remedy for this condition. It purifies, vitalizes and enriches the blood, overcomes that tired feeling, builds up the nerves and gives perfect health. Read this:

"Our daughter, Blanche, when four years of age, had a humor break out on her hands and face, which our physician pronounced eczema. If the cold air reached her face or hands they would swell up, look almost purple, and beaded blisters would form and break, Discharging a watery fluid, and the burning and itching would drive her nearly wild. Unless we encased her little hands she would tear patches of skin from her face and hands. We tried many doctors and many remedies and at last gave the case up as hopeless. But our daughter Cora tried Hood's Sarsaparilla, to cure a scrofulous lump near the left breast which caused her much pain and after taking 4 bottles it disappeared. Blanche, who is now eleven, had spent seven years of suffering, so I concluded to give her Hood's Sarsaparilla. She took 5 bottles and her face is smooth and soft as a baby's, the color of a rose petal. Her hands are soft and white, where four months ago they were blue and red and calloused nearly like leather. I cannot express my gratitude by pen or mouth. It seems a miracle and our friends are surprised." Mrs. Anna L. Clark, 401 E. 4th St., Duluth, Minn. Get only Hood's, because

It is difficult to unite the professions of genius and member of a royal family, as the Countess Valda Gleichen has discovered. She has musical talent which she wishes to use. Her majesty had given her consent to the young lady singing in public, but the German relatives of the late Prince Victor of Hohenlohe are averse to his daughter making a profession for herself. It is just as difficult a question why one sister should be a sculptor by profession and another debarred from making use of her musical talent, but those who know are well aware that the surroundings of the two artistic lives must be very different, the sculptor pursuing art in the retirement of a studio in a royal palace, while the singer must necessarily live a more public life and have more public associations.

A stout old lady seeing at one of the railway stations an automatic machine from which by dropping a penny in the slot you receive the portrait of a celebrity, carefully reconnoitred it. She dropped the coin in, and posed herself in front of the machine for a few seconds, opened the door, and drew out the portrait.

Adjusting her spectacles and looking at it, what should meet her astonished gaze but a portrait of a lady acrobat in costume!

"Well!" she ejaculated, "so this is me, eh? If I don't speak to the authorities about this, my name's not Maria Jenkins!"

Settlers for the West.

The first week in April the Great Northern railway took a train of 400 people, actual settlers, not excursionists, to the Red River Valley and the Turtle Mountain country of North Dakota. They occupied nine coaches, and their household effects and farm implements filled several long freight trains. We believe this to be the largest movement of settlers to a new locality that has taken place in one body for several years. The people composing this colony are known as Dunkards, or German Baptists, and come mainly from Indiana, with a few from Ohio, Kansas and other states. All are farmers. Many of them will take up government land, while others will buy farms on the crop payment plan, several of the old bonanza farmers in North Dakota having divided up their places and take payment in a share of the crop. No crop, no payment. This is the second party of these people to locate in North Dakota, 235 having gone there last spring in one party, and their report being favorable this train was the result.

The Door of Life.

The fear of pain and the dangers of parturition fill many a woman's breast with dismay. There is no reason why childbirth should be fraught with danger and distress. It is a natural function, and should be performed in a natural way without undue suffering. Nature never intended that women should be tortured in this way.

Taken during gestation Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription robs childbirth of its dangers to both mother and child, by preparing the system for delivery, thereby shortening labor, lessening pain and abbreviating the period of confinement.

STATE LEGISLATURE.

WORK OF THE MINNESOTA LAW-MAKERS.

Condensed Report of the Proceedings in the Senate and House, Comprising a Brief Summary of the Week's Business.

St. Paul, April 18.—Much of the session of the senate was consumed in roll calls while the accumulation of bills on the calendar were being enacted into laws. The only incidents that disturbed the routine of the day were the two fights, one during the morning and the other during the afternoon, made by Senator Greer on the insurance bill, a recodification of all the insurance laws of the state. A call of the senate was made to get back the members who had disappeared during the flood of oratory, and forty-six senators were secured. The roll was called and the bill passed —42 to 3.

S. F. No. 683—Collester—To repeal chapter 23, Special Laws 1891, to authorize and direct the treasurer of the Village of Janesville, Waseca county, to pay one-half of all moneys derived from licenses granted for the sale of intoxicating liquors in said village to the treasurer of the school district of Janesville. Passed.

S. F. No. 739—Iltis—To appropriate $1,200 for the removal of the Birch Coulee monument in Renville county, and to change its inscription so that it shall read that Maj. Brown was in command at the battle. Passed.

S. F. No. 741—To amend section 5, chapter 69, General Statutes 1878, relating to proceedings to debar husband and wife from interest in the property of the other. Passed.

S. F. No. 341—Potter—To create the office of county assessor, to regulate his salary and the salaries and number of his deputies. Passed, 28 to 11.

S. F. No. 554—Stevens—To further regulate elections, relating to ballots; providing for perforated ballots. A fight was made upon the bill, alleging that it was in the interest of city printers. Senator Stevens made an earnest speech in its favor, saying it was an effort to prevent bribery at elections. Passed, 30 to 9.

S. F. No. 542—Stebbins—To provide for the sale of the state capitol lands in Kandiyohi county, and for the repeal of chapter 132, General Laws 1891, relating to leasing said lands.

S. F. No. 647—Wing—To amend section 29, chapter 132, General Laws 1883, as amended, relating to the control of infectious diseases. Passed, 29 to 2.

S. F. No. 476—Schaller—To provide for elementary normal school instruction in state high schools and to appropriate $10,000 for the same. Passed, 33 to 0.

S. F. No. 410—Lunham—To enable owners of land to lay out and construct public roads, prescribing the powers of county commissioners and their officers relating thereto, and providing for the drainage and repair of the roads constructed under this act. Passed, 29 to 0.

In the House.

The following among other bills were passed:

To reduce the salary of the supreme court reporter to $2,000 per annum.

Dunham — Relating to roads and bridges.

Stevens—Relating to the articles of incorporation of certain beneficiary societies.

Heneman—Relating to village cemeteries.

Collester—Relating to courts of justice of the peace.

Roverud—To amend the penal code.

Yale—To provide for the publication of official state and county ballots.

Underleak — Providing for the cooperation of educational institutes.

Committee on Approbriations — To appropriate money for the supreme court contingent.

Jacobson—To provide for the preservation of the battle and camp grounds of Camp Release.

Mathieson—To prevent fraud in the manufacture and sale of cheese.

Cant—Granting certain powers to the city councils of cities.

Wooldridge—To amend an act to regulate elections.

Mallette—Relating to the change of boundaries of counties.

Soule—To prohibit sectarian instruction in the public schools.

Mansfield—Relating to the burial of honorably discharged soldiers, sailors and marines.

On motion of Mr. Olds S. F. No. 737, a joint memorial to congress relating to deep waterways, was read the second time and placed on the calendar.

The conference committee on H. F. No. 40, relating to the size of election districts, reported and the bill was laid upon the table. The bill was called up later and amended on motion of Mr. Cant exempting cities from the provisions of the bill and passed.

Mr. Wright's bill, H. F. No. 665, to provide for free traveling libraries, was defeated, and Mr. Staples gave notice of reconsideration.

St. Paul, April 19.—Senator Ozmun presided over the committee of the whole when the land bills, H. F. No. 359 and S. F. No. 602, were under consideration. The former is the so-called Staples bill and the latter is supposed to represent the wishes of State Auditor Dunn. Senator Sperry moved that the senate take up S. F. No. 602 and consider it section by section. The motion was resisted vigorously by Senator Schaller, who insisted that it would be unfair to him and the other friends of the house bill. Senator Sperry said he made the motion merely to test the opinion of the senate. The motion was carried by a large majority. Senator Thompson moved that the Staples bill, H. F. No. 359, be postponed indefinitely. Senator Young declared that if the motion prevailed it settled all hope of legislation on the subject during this session.

Senator Day made a winning speech for the house bill by insisting that under the conditions confronting the senate it dared not kill the bill and thus destroy all hope for any law. Everybody, he said, conceded the laws under wich the state had lost hundreds of thousands, perhaps millions of dollars, should be changed. The motion to indefinitely postpone the house bill was lost by a tie vote—21 to 21.

A motion to take up S. F. No. 602 was voted down and the Staples bill was agreed upon as the basis of the bill. Only eleven of the forty-four sections of the bill were considered. The eleventh section is the pivotal one, and it was finally approved as originally drawn by Mr. Staples, not as passed by the house. It will permit the sale of state timber when it is liable to destruction or waste. The method of ascertaining the amount of timber to a given area will be that advocated by Mr. Staples.

House Proceedings.

In the house Dr. Zier's patent medicine bill, H. F. No. 635, was taken up and the author moved that the committee recommend its passage. Mr. Johns moved to indefinitely postpone, and Mr. Scofield, in support of the motion, said the bill was absurd. The motion to indefinitely postpone was voted down and the bill was recommended to pass by a large majority.

When H. F. No. 730, Mr. Cant's bill to abolish days of grace, was reached, Mr. Cant moved to recommend the bill for passage. The bill was recommended to be indefinitely postponed.

On Motion of Mr. Furlong H. F. No. 667, to transfer $150,000 from the general revenue fund to the internal improvement fund, the motion to substitute S. F. No. 558—Lloyd—prevailed. The committee got into a tangle, and Mr. Furlong, to straighten matters out, moved as a substitute that the committee take up S. F. 558. There was strong objection, but it was finally carried by a vote of 41 to 33. Mr. Furlong then moved that the bill be recommended to pass. The bill was so recommended by a vote of 46 to 20.

The Miller express bill was passed, after a hot fight, as it came from the senate.

The Warner bill to abolish the board of public works and to substitute a department of public works was also passed, although the delegation was divided on it.

St. Paul, April 20.—At the opening of the senate a motion was made and carried referring the Staples and Potter pine land bills to a special committee. Just before the senate took its recess the special committee reported. It recommended the Staples bill, H. F. No. 359, for passage, with certain minor amendemnts.

The senate took up the appropriation bill. No important items were stricken out and none added.

On motion of Senator Keller half the appropriation for the St. Cloud normal school, being $12,500, was made available the next fiscal year and the other half in 1897. This will permit the improvement of the St. Cloud normal school at once.

Upon the motion of Senator Stebbins and against the protest of Senator Iltis, the bill was amended so as to provide $35,000 for an inebriate asylum at the Rochester insane hospital, but, later the appropriation was stricken out.

Senator Heneman tried to have the appropriations for all state institutions scaled down 25 per cent. but failed.

In the House.

The house kept up its reputation for being a hard-working body and turned off more than the usual quota of business.

The general appropriations bill was considered section by section, slightly amended and passed, all within three hours. The only change of importance was the amendment appropriating $10,000 for plans and foundations for the Duluth normal school building. In the afternoon, however, the bill was recommended, on motion of Mr. Grondahl, and an amendment providing for an appropriation of $16,000 for the erection of an additional cottage at the state reform school was adopted and the amended bill passed.

The afternoon session was consumed in the consideration of the Culkin primary election bill. It was fought tooth and nail by many of the members from the country and a few of the city statesmen. After having been slightly amended it was placed on its final passage and defeated, receiving only 57 votes, one less than the requisite number. The vote was reconsidered, and the bill was laid upon the table, and will, doubtless be passed.

The Birch Coulee bill was called up and passed under suspension of the rules by a vote of 73 to 2. It now awaits the signature of Gov. Clough, and will then have become a law.

St. Paul, April 21.—"As a result of the infamous conduct of this senate, I warn you that the northern fifteen counties of the state will, within the next decade, no longer be a part of the State of Minnesota."

This threat of rebellion uttered by Senator Spencer in explanation of his vote upon the general appropriation bill was pronounced by all who heard it the most remarkable sentiment given expression to by any senator during the present session.

It came about in this way. Some Duluth people want a normal school. The almost universal sentiment of the senate is against building any more normal schools anywhere. When the senate bill for the Duluth normal school came up it was indefinitely postponed. In courtesy to Senator Spencer it was reinstated and the Duluth senator made a vigorous fight for it, in which he assured the senate that no appropriation was asked at this time; all Duluth wanted this legislature to do was to locate the next normal school at Duluth. But so strong was the sentiment against extending normal schools that in spite of the desire to do something generous for Duluth the proposition was voted down. At that time Senator Spencer lost his temper and threatened to get even with the senators who had opposed him. The appropriation bill passed—40 to 0.

Immediately after the final vote on the appropriation bill the public land bill was taken up, and after discussion the Staples bill was passed.

The following among other bills passed:

Providing for the giving of bonds by contractors on public works for the better protection of the municipalities and the laborers employed on the contract; providing for the census of 1895; to legalize the incorporation of villages; to exempt from the usual 10 per cent rule the number of persons employed in the brush factory at the St. Cloud reformatory; exempting bicycles from execution.

In the House.

The following among other bills were passed:

Jacobson—To provide for examination of certain amount of grain mortgaged in certain cases.

Mickleson — To provide for assessment of taxes upon grain and its products stored in elevators.

Knuteson—Relating to township assessors.

Robbins—To limit the fees in cases of contested elections before the legislature of this state.

Mullin—To license dogs.

Schurmeier—Relating to elections.

Mellicke—Relating to state board of health and vital statistics.

McInnis—Relating to the organization of townships.

J. D. Jones—Relating to highways.

Barta—Providing for bringing in additional parties to suits.

Gunn—For the enlargement of organized counties.

Feig—To promote practical forestry and to appropriate $1,500 annually therefor.

McKenney—Relative to property exempt from execution.

J. N. Jones—To provide for a lien for the owners and operators of threshing machines.

J. M. Smith—Relating to city depositories and interests on balances therein.

Wyman — To codify the insurance laws.

S. F. No. 4—Stevens—A proposed constitutional amendment for the taxation of the gross earnings of sleeing car and other companys. It was amended to include the output of iron mining companies, and the debate which preceded the favorable recommendation of the bill was the hottest and most acrimonious of the session.

The Zier patent medicine bill was defeated by a vote of 49 to 29.

St. Paul, April 23. — In the senate Mr. Stevens introduced and secured the passage of the following resolution, drawn by the members of the Sons of the American Revolution:

"Whereas, The object of educating our children to make them good and intelligent citizens; and whereas, nothing tends more to good and patriotic citizenship than respect and love for our institutions and our flag; resolved, that the trustees and teachers of every school district in the State of Minnesota, be, and they are hereby requested, so far as practicable, to provide for the display of the stars and stripes in or about their school houses at all times during school hours."

The following among other bills were passed: Kelly, to establish free libraries and reading rooms; Calkins, to regulate and legalize primary elections; for the inspection of dairies and herds; general appropriation bill; to appropriate $30,000 for a cottage at the soldiers' home; Hanson, state normal school at Litchfield; Howard, voting machines in elections; Parker, depositories for town moneys; the Johnson "Y" bill; prohibiting charging excess for overloading cars; Swanson, compelling unwilling owners to assist in digging town ditches; Dingman, providing for two days for registration; Robbins, for treatment of inebriates by counties; $50,000 for machinery at penitentiary; appropriating $15,800 for the relief of John H. Mullen; to amend the law relating to the railway and warehouse commission so that a party desiring to appeal from its order may appeal to the county where the parties reside.

The Mellicke freedom of traffic bill and the bill to authorize and empower cities in this state to contract with private corporations for a term of ten years for water, gas, electric light, and to regulate the price, quantity and quality thereof, known as the gas monopoly, were lost.

The official report of the special legislative committee to investigate the amputation of James O'Neill's arm in the Stillwater prison was presented and the surgeon was exonerated.

In the House.

The house again worked faithfully, and over thirty bills were passed and nearly as many more advanced to third reading.

There was quite a fight over the Mathieson bill providing for the inspection of milk and dairy herds in cities, but Dr. Zier made a speech which showed up the danger from tuberculosis so plainly that the opposition wilted and the bill passed. It was subsequently passed by the senate under suspension of the rules, and is now in the hands of the governor for signature.

There was another fight over the pool room bill and the opposition was outgeneraled and the supporters of the bill, under the leadership of Mr. Jacobson, carried the day. First they knocked out the amendments of the house committee, then the bill was passed, only four members voting no.

Mr. Feig's bill to allow newspapers printed in foreign languages to publish legal notices was amended and passed. The amended bill allows them to publish the session laws (printed in English), and does not permit the publication of legal notices.

The house concurred in the senate amendments to the Staples land bill, both of which now await the signature of the governor to become laws.

The Culkin primary election bill was called up and passed by a vote of 88 to 13.

The following among other bills passed:

Stevens—To fix and regulate the salaries of officers in certain cities of the state and confer certain powers upon common councils.

Committee on Hospitals for the Insane—To provide for the examination and commitment of inebriates to the special department for the treatment of same in the Rochester state hospital.

Spencer—To amend the section regulating the hours of labor.

Fuller—To validate the acts of villages heretofore attempted to be incorporated in the State of Minnesota, under the provisions of a certain charter of the General Laws of Minnesota.

Thompson—To reincorporate villages of 2,000 inhabitants or over.

Howard—Relating to the carnal knowledge and abuse of children.

Peterson—To provide for the purchase of land for the third hospital for the insane at Fergus Falls.

Morgan—To provide a penalty for coercing or influencing or making demands or requirements of employes, servants, laborers and persons seeking employment.

LEGISLATIVE WORK.

GOOD WORK ACCOMPLISHED BY THE LEGISLATURE.

Members Have Been Industrious and Patriotic—Text of the Principal Bills Which Have Just Become a Portion of the Laws of Minnesota.

Pioneer Press, April 22.

A very busy and businesslike session of the legislature closes to-morrow. A partial list of bills enacted into laws and signed by Gov. Clough prior to Saturday night and found below gives a perspective of the work done. Many bills, and some of general interest, passed both branches during the latter part of the week, but they have not yet received official consideration by the governor and therefore are not included in the list. Among these may be mentioned Senator Ozmun's bill limiting the expenditures of candidates and Senator Miller's bill regulating express companies and their charges and placing the companies under the supervision of the railroad and warehouse commission. There are about 100 bills now awaiting gubernatorial consideration, and nearly as many more are awaiting action in the two houses to-day.

The interests of the agricultural portions of the state received much attention from the legislature. Among the bills passed for the former are: The Russian thistle bill, intended to eradicate the pest, and subordinate legislation amending the weed laws of the state; the establishment of two new experiment stations; the appropriation of $50,000 to continue the state drainage operations; the granting of a bounty for raising beet sugar; increased twine manufacturing facilities in the Stillwater prison; the creation of a department to aid in fighting chinch bugs and other destructive insects, and a large number of other laws.

The bone and sinew of the state, the men who work with their hands, received such laws as they asked. Among them are: The Lovejoy child labor law, regulating the employment of minors in workshops, mines and factories; Steven's law, regulating employment bureaus; the factory inspection law amendment; bringing non-resident owners under the control of the labor commissioner and improving the law relating to factory and mill fire-escapes; the Schurmeier prison labor law, preventing competition with convict labor, and other laws bearing on the general proposition. Senator Steven's compulsory arbitration bill has not yet passed the house of representatives.

All of the laws relating to the management and sale of public lands and timber were carefully considered. A new bill, revising and recodifying them, was passed. It is supposed to be so worded as to prevent any repetition of fraud or collusion in disposing of the forests growing on state and school lands. In order to prevent a repetition of the destructive forest fires of 1894 a carefully prepared law was enacted creating a state fire warden and making local township supervisors his deputies clothed with full authority to extinguish forest fires before they had gotten beyond control.

The temperance and school laws of the state were carefully revised in minor particulars and changes made that will place Minnesota farther in the lead of her sister states in legislation relating to these subjects. The high license system is preserved intact and all known loopholes obstructed. At the same time no prohibition or sumptuary laws found their way to the statutes of 1895. The proposed laws relating to public schools were entrusted to legislative committees composed of experienced educators and afterwards thoroughly discussed in both branches of the legislature. No startling changes in former laws were made, but some of the benefits heretofore enjoyed by larger villages and cities have been extended to district graded schools.

Pure Politics.

A determined and successful effort was made looking to the purification of political methods, especially in crowded centers of population. Five bills were introduced relating to primaries and caucuses, and after thorough investigation a compromise bill was passed throwing the sanctity of the law over primaries. It is supposed to contain provisions that will prevent the will of the people being subverted at the foundation of the free government, the primaries. A proposed constitutional amendment will be submitted to the voters at the next general election which provides that foreigners coming within the confines of Minnesota must be full fledged American citizens before they become possessed of the elective franchise.

Several bills affecting railroads, and which have been discussed generally for a number of years, were passed. Prominent among them are: The bill to tax unoccupied railroad lands as other lands in the state are taxed. This question will be submitted to the people at the next general election. The Hastings & Dakota forfeiture bill, affecting about 350,000 acres of land, was passed. Also the Jacobson "Y" bill was passed. The legislature addressed a memorial to the United States senate on the Patterson pooling bill pending in that body, which is supposed to have had some bearing in the subsequent defeat of the measure.

The fish and game laws of the state were amended in several details and are now thought to afford better protection to the game, looking to the increased enjoyment of true sportsmen. The soldier boys of the state had no difficulty in securing the passage of a bill to reorganize the national guard along the lines adopted by the regulars. With equal ease they secured a liberal appropriation for the improvement of their camp ground at Lakeview and a medical corps.

The question of better roads through the state was not overlooked. It was determined that any mandatory increased expenditure was unadvisable at this time, but a number of changes in the law were made. The general effect of the changes is to leave it optional with the counties whether they will enjoy the benefits inevitably resulting from good roads or if they will neglect their own best interests. Any locality can in the future abolish the system of working out the road tax and adopt the more efficient method employed to advantage in older states. The use of wide wagon tires is to be encouraged by allowing a $2 rebate from the individual road taxes for every such wagon.

The needs of the cities and villages of the state received their meed of attention. A complete system of municipal government is provided in the Howard charter bill, and its adoption is left optional with every city. In addition to this "ready made" charter a constitutional amendment will be submitted at the next election, which, if carried, will permit cities to make their own charters with provisions suited to the peculiarities of their respective conditions and surroundings. A large number of other bills relating to cities and villages were passed. There were passed many bills relating to towns and counties, which are intended to correct any existing difficulties in the local government of rural districts.

The legislature also made into laws bills relating to the practice in the courts, looking to protection of litigants and making it convenient and cheap for every citizen to find protection under the wings of justice as represented by the laws of the land. Many bills were passed to cure some technical irregularity in the transactions of municipalities and public officials, and to do substantial justice in spite of former legal mistakes. The tax laws of the state were amended in minor particulars and a host of bills relating to all sorts of things were considered and acted upon.

BLOOD ON A SHOE.

Sensational Discoveries in the San Francisco Case.

San Francisco, April 23.—Referring to the rumor that Blanche Lamont was lured to the church by Durant's promise to perform a criminal operation on her to save her from disgrace and that when she shrieked in agony he caught her by the throat to stifle her cries and choked her to death, Dr. Barrett, the city autopsy physician, stated the rumor was without foundation. He says he took especial care in the matter of autopsy and he is satisfied that no criminal operation was performed. He also stated that both young women died of strangulation, and that the knife wounds on Miss Williams' body were not the cause of death. Among the gruesome exhibits in the case is one that was quietly taken to police headquarters and locked up, and not until a late hour last night did the police acknowledge they had it. This exhibit is a shoe, and on its sole are dark spots that were made when the wearer stepped into a pool of blood that came from the body of Miss Williams. The shoe is the property of the Rev. Geo. Gibson, pastor of the church, and it was found in his study in the edifice last Sunday just after the finding of the body of Miss Lamont. This statement has created a sensation and gives those who have been hinting that Rev. Gibson may be the guilty man, an opportunity to emphasize their suspicions. However, the police do not seem to see in it anything that implicates the pastor, for they argue that the person that killed the two girls was familiar with the church, must have known the shoes were there and may have worn them in his bloody undertaking.

INFLUENCING A JUROR.

This the Charge Lodged Against a Man in Milwaukee.

Milwaukee, April 23.—Judge Austin to-day ordered that M. A. Patitz be brought into court to answer to a charge of trying to influence the verdict of a juryman in the case of W. J. Lavelle vs. the Milwaukee road. Petitz is chief draftsman in the West Milwaukee shops of the company. He was one of the chief witnesses for the road when the case was tried last February. G. H. Kieck, who was on the jury that tried the case, to-day made affidavit that Patitz approached him and said that Lavelle had been offered a steady job and $4,000 with the road and was a fool for not accepting it. The case was being argued to-day for a new trial, which was granted. The jury in the first trial of the case gave Lavelle a verdict for $11,000. Lavelle was riding in a passenger car with one arm hanging out of the window. As the car passed a siding his arm was struck by the door of a car and badly lacerated.

NO NEW TRIAL.

Unless One Is Granted on Appeal to Supreme Court.

Minneapolis, April 23.—The supreme court will now pass upon Harry Hayward's fate. It is his last chance, barring death, for escaping the gallows. Judge Smith filed his formal order denying the motion for a new trial. There was little surprise, for the result had been expected. Jailer West took the news to Hayward in his cage. The condemned man laughed.

"That's what I thought," he said. "It will be the same in the supreme court. They are afraid of the public. I suppose the newspapers will remind their readers that there are thirteen letters in the signature of the judge, etc. Well, there's lots of time yet, and I will be here when Blixt is convicted — that's one comfort, and he ought to die seven times over for his dirty, brutal deed."

Mrs. Parnell May Die.

Bordertown, N. J., April 23. — Mrs. Parnell passed a good night and seemed brighter this morning, but as the day advanced she grew weaker. It is doubtful whether she will survive the shock of the assault. Nothing has yet developed to throw any light upon the case, although the detectives are still at work. The theory that the crime was committed by tramps is not believed.

Yearned for in Colorado.

Sioux Falls, S. D., April 23.—One of the boldest cattle thieves ever known in this state has just been captured on a ranch near Camp Creek. His name is W. C. Jones, and at one time, it is charged, he stole a whole herd of cattle numbering 200 head. He was taken by Colorado authorities.

Fort Relieved.

Simla, April 23.—Maj. Gen. Sir Robert Low, commanding the Chitral relief force, telegraphed this morning that Maj. Deane learned last night that the Chitral fort had been relieved.

For Shoving the Queer.

Minneapolis, April 23.—The passing of spurious money is the charge preferred against two men giving the names of Frank Lee and M. Crowley, who were taken into custody last evening.

Wholesale Baptism.

Lawrence, Kan., April 23.—One hundred and eighteen colored Baptist converts were baptized yesterday at the close of the morning service in a local church.

Failure at Denver.

Denver, April 23. — The Denver Hardware Manufacturing company has made an assignment for the benefit of creditors.

Died Suddenly.

Springfield, Ohio, April 23.—Mrs. P. P. Mast, wife of Mayor Mast, expired suddenly to-day of dropsy of the heart.

Under a Horse.

Pierre, S. D., April 23.—Frank Lynelt of Pittson, Pa., visiting here, was killed to-day by a horse falling on him.

Ex-Congressman Dead.

Owensboro, Ky., April 23.—Ex-Congressman W. N. Sweeny, the most prominent lawyer of Western Kentucky, died suddenly to-day aged 63 years.

Earthquakes Continue.

Vienna, April 23.—The earthquakes continue with severity at Laibach.

Hugh Thompson spent Sunday in the city and returned to Grand Forks this morning. In conversation concerning the present state of affairs with the milling association Mr, Thompson said "The trouble comes from mismanagement on the part of Mr, Turner. I became aware six months since that the affairs were not as represented by the manager, and tried to convince the directors of the fact. Mr. Turner knew that he could not continue in his position and I have documentary proof that he proposed to wreck the association. This intention was what precipitated the assignment, There was no reason for assigning, if matters had been run properly, The company has paid off $150,000 of claims since, January 1st, and had not exhausted its paying capacity when the assignment had to be made. The mills are all closed down and will remain so an indefinite length of time,"—Crookston Times.

Governor Clough has signed the Red River Valley drainage bill, and $50 000 more will be spent in digging ditches to drain out of the country what little water God Almighty has given us. The Tribune doubts the expediency of this drainage business, and predicts that in ten years from now the people of this valley will be discussing the advisibility of irrigation, If all the tillage land in the Red River Valley was under cultivation, and there was a demand for more land, it would then be time to drain the wet lands, but when there are hundreds of thousands of acres of good agricultural lands in the Valley that have never had the touch of the plow, there does not seem to be a crying demand for this drainage business, which is certainly ruinous to the surrounding country, If provision was made for storing in the country the water taken from the wet lands, it would be all right, but once let this water get away to Hudson Bay and very little of it will ever comes back, —Crookston Tribune,

By order of the Village Board of Health,

J. L. Johnson, Chairman,
H. E. Ives
C. G. Rapp

Dated at St. Hilaire April 16th 1895

A vote of eighty to seventeen in the House of Representatives last Monday evening against proceeding further in the Ives impeachment case is a magnificent vindication of Judge Ives' official actions and a well deserved blow to the traducers of that honorable jurist. After hearing both reports of the judiciary committee, after the investigation, prolonged and ardent arguments of Feig, Johns, et al, the House saw instantly that the charges against Judge Ives were fraught with malice and in disposing of the matter as promptly and forcibly as it did, planted the heel of condemnation upon all such vindictive proceedings.

The Press does not contend that Judge Ives has at all times followed the strict rules of jurisprudence in the administration of his duties but we do believe that every act of his has been in accordance with his idea of right and to meet peculiar exigences as exist in no other locality.

It is of no use for the fellows who have been so badly beaten in this extraordinary action to deny that their attack upon Judge Ives was prompted more by a spirit of malice than by a sincere desire to further the ends of justice. Mr, Montague's own statement published in a Minneapolis paper immediately after the result was announced proves this beyond a peradventure and puts Mr. Montague in a very uncomplementary light to say the least,

The Press offers its congratulations to Judge Ives upon his complete vindication and bids him pursue the honorable course he has undertaken until Polk county shall have been redeemed from the machinations of ringsters, tricksters and other evil doers and law and justice shall have taken their place —Thief River Falls Press.

ALABASTER MINES.

An Industry In Pisa That Flourished Even In Ancient Times.

Thirty-two miles southeast of Pisa, in the province of that name, a very remarkable and very ancient industry is carried on. We refer to the alabaster industry, of which a full description from actual observation is given by Vice Consul Carmichael of Leghorn in a foreign postoffice report. Volterra, where the alabaster is found, enjoys special distinction among places in the world which produce that commodity. The material, which is of five main varieties, is found in nodules imbedded in huge masses of limestone. At the end of each cavern whence it is extracted two or three men are to be seen working with small T shaped picks by the dim light of unprotected oil-lamps of Etruscan pattern, which, by a singular tenacity of tradition, are still in use in the district. In one case the block of alabaster will be already well projected from its bed of limestone, and the operator is carefully picking away all around it in order to extricate the complete block. The larger the specimen the more valuable it is in proportion to its weight. In another search is still being made for the alabaster, and the workman is vigorously beating down the wall of limestone until he lights upon the white nose of what looks like a block. He then picks away carefully so as not to injure the prize. When there seems a likelihood of a large quantity of limestone having to be removed, blasting with gunpowder is resorted to.

The alabaster industry dates back to classic times. Great changes have taken place in it, however, within living memory. In former days there were three distinct classes of workmen engaged in the work of fashioning the raw material—the master, artist, who owned a workshop and employed numerous workers, selling his products direct to the alabaster shops or "galleries;" the journeymen and the travelers, men who took huge cases of the goods and sold them as they went along in all the countries of the world, civilized and uncivilized. Of these two—the master worker and the traveler—are now extinct species. Nowadays three men, usually relatives, work together in informal partnership, one being a turner, another a modeler and the third a decorator, who carves such decorative adjuncts on the finished articles as fruit and flowers. Their gains are very small, and indeed travelers who put in at the port of Leghorn and have alabaster vases, statuary and the like offered at almost absurdly low prices refuse, as a rule, to believe that they can be made by hand.

One kind of alabaster is made by a process of dyeing, which is still a trade secret, into an excellent imitation of coral. For a time this had a very large sale, but the trade is now threatened with extinction. It is suggested that the people of the east, who used to buy it largely, left off doing so, as they were doubtful whether the sham article could properly be used in the religious rites wherein coral plays a part. The alabaster workers have true artistic characteristics, but in their desire to turn out what they think will sell they neglect the fine models that are to be found in such profusion in the churches of Italy and flood the market with eternal reproductions of a limited number of classical figures and with flashy modern dancing girls, coquettish living girls, faultlessly clad pifferari and impossibly spruce lazzaroni.—London News.

A Dramatic Future.

It may be that it is better for a man to read anything than nothing, as the faintest halo of belief may be something higher than no faith at all. But we are inclined to be of Emerson's mind and shun the reading of any book that is not at the least a year old. Time will choose for us, and the muddy stream of periodical literature will not be worth our drinking until filtered by his agency. If this be true with books, it will even more assuredly be true with stage plays, which are but a subsidiary mode of education and by no means necessary for a right appreciation of life.

So we may be content to sit apart for a time, watching for what may come forth from the present theatrical chaos, that we may note judiciously the ultimate survivors. For though in a sense we may be merely players upon the stage of the earth, yet our whole concern is not with mummeries, and there are other things worthy men's notice besides masks and long speeches.—Macmillan's Magazine.

Foster's Best Song.

"Massa's In the Cold, Cold Ground" was considered by Stephen Foster to be the best of all his compositions. He got the idea from a slave of Covington, Ky., whom he heard bewailing the fact that his good old master was dead, and that he and several other slaves who had become old and wornout would now pass into the hands of less kindly owners.

THE ORGAN'S INTRICACIES.

The keyboard of a modern church organ contains from 56 to 61 keys and is consequently 4 1-2 to 5 octaves in compass. The lowest or bottom left hand key is C. Now, counting each octave from the left, it reads thus: The lowest octave is called the "CC" octave, written with two capital C's; the next is the "tenor" octave, written with one capital C; the next the "middle" octave, written with an italic C, with a figure 1 over it—"C1;" the next is the "treble" octave, written with an italic C and a figure 2 over it—"C2;" the next is the "alto" octave, written with an italic C and a figure 3 over it—"C3."

The lowest octave is sometimes called the "bass octave" or "double C" octave, and the GG is called the "gamut G." The G of the tenor octave is called also "fiddle G," it giving the sound of G on the open string of the violin. The black keys are always called "sharps," never "flats," each as "F sharp," not "G flat."

If, then, any key is wrong, mention it as follows: Tenor d on the oboe is out of tune, etc., or middle a sharp on the flute is out of tune or weak, etc. If a note will not respond to a key when touched on any particular "stop," try another stop, and if it responds on that the first stop tried is out of order by its pipe not sounding. Then describe this so. Middle c on the melodia is "off its speech." When couplers are out of order, describe the position of the note and mention the coupler thus: Tenor c "swell to great" is "off."

A great organ separation is a contrivance used in organs of pneumatic key and stop action. By the use of two pistons or buttons over the keys a player can "separate" or silence all the great organ from the other manuals and instantly restore the sound again. Thus suppose both swell and choir were coupled to the great organ and the player's hands were using the great keys, and the piece called for only the swell and choir coupled, then pressing the button disconnects the great organ pro tem., so that it is silent, and the fingers need not be taken off the great keys, but be kept on and ready for the sudden loud change by pressing the relieving button.

A "salicional," from Latin "salicet," weeping, is the French equivalent for the "dulciana" in English and American church organs. The "vox angelica," or "angel voice," is the softest stop in the organ. It does not come up to anything angelic that human beings know of other than the quiet voice of conscience, the latter being far more serviceable and cheaper. The "vox celeste" is a stop tuned slightly "out of tune" so as to pulsate or beat with any other stop played with it. It has nothing to do with "celestial voices," as far as I know. We presume heaven is perfect and all nature as well, but anything out of tune offends the musician's ear. Then why encourage it? The vox angelica effect can be got by playing on the salicional with the swell closed. The best vox celeste not out of tune is the "tremulant." Both the angelica and celeste are excellent stops for indifferent players to moon about on for hours, but an overdose produces cold sweats and other changes, due no doubt to the temperature of the air above to where we are wafted. Both stops are expensive but useless additions to church organs and probably never used more than twice a year, perhaps never.—Providence Journal.

The Drama in the Transvaal.

Two curious coincidences happened during the progress of "The Village Priest" at the Standard, Johannesburg. In the third act Marguerite tells her mother that they do not live in a house of cards, and hardly were the words out of Miss Affy Bevan's mouth than fearful crashes of a minor earthquake kind were heard behind the scenes, the "wings" tottered, and a cabinet containing flowerpots and vases was overturned with a great smash. A few sentences afterward the comtesse declared "her idol was shattered," and she gazed pensively upon the fragments of broken vases. Upon Miss Affy Bevan's exit a voice from the "gods" warned her "not to go out there, as she might be killed," an apt sally which a contemporary says produced a general laugh from the audience.—South Africa.

Eastern Stranger—The Joneses and Robbinses are related, I understand.

Experienced Native—I should say they were. When old Robbins was divorced, he married Miss Jones, and her elder brother, Potter Jones, married Mrs. Robbins. (Stranger gasps.) Oh, that's not half of it! The year after that young Mrs. Robbins got a divorce and married the former Mrs. Robbins's uncle, and last year Potter Jones was divorced and married Robbins's younger sister. That's how it stands at present, but they say Robbins is paying attention to Potter Jones's aunt now, so there's no telling how much further the family conection may extend.—Life.

Pretty summer dresses of inexpensive fabrics are made with a fitted Jersey-like bodice, reaching well over the hips and fastened up the back. This bodice is elaborately trimmed, and bishop sleeves of immense size are added. The skirt portion is either kilted or shirred to the edge of the bodice, and has merely a deep hem at the bottom. Toilets of ecru batiste are made with a yoke waist, likewise fastened in the back, as are many of the bodices both for day and evening wear. The batiste is trimmed either with broad black velvet ribbon overlaid with narrower bands of ecru lace insertion, or with bands and shoulder frills of the lace alone.

KNOWLEDGE

Brings comfort and improvement and tends to personal enjoyment when rightly used. The many, who live better than others and enjoy life more, with less expenditure, by more promptly adapting the world's best products to the needs of physical being, will attest the value to health of the pure liquid laxative principles embraced in the remedy, Syrup of Figs.

Its excellence is due to its presenting in the form most acceptable and pleasant to the taste, the refreshing and truly beneficial properties of a perfect laxative; effectually cleansing the system, dispelling colds, headaches and fevers and permanently curing constipation. It has given satisfaction to millions and met with the approval of the medical profession, because it acts on the Kidneys, Liver and Bowels without weakening them and it is perfectly free from every objectionable substance.

Syrup of Figs is for sale by all druggists in 50c and $1 bottles, but it is manufactured by the California Fig Syrup Co. only, whose name is printed on every package, also the name, Syrup of Figs, and being well informed, you will not accept any substitute if offered.

STEEL TANKS
We furnish steel tanks with covers, all galvanized after completion, in nests of ten, 8 to 12 feet high and 30 to 36 inches in diameter, at 2½c. per gallon. They do not rust, shrink, leak, give taste to water, nor allow foreign substances to get in. They can be put in garret or barn and thus are protected from freezing. They take no setting up, are cheaper than wood. Tank substructures of all sizes made to order. Send for price list and designs for substructure and ornamental water supply.
AERMOTOR CO.
CHICAGO.
2½ CTS PER GAL.

Did you ever stop to think how completely the Aermotor Co. made the modern windmill business? How it has monopolized this entire line of manufacture because of its ideas, inventions, designs, qualities and prices, or forced others to be liberal and servile imitators? Witness the steel wheel, the back geared pumper, the high geared power mill, the steel towers, fixed and tilting, the galvanizing of work after completion, the grinder centrifugal feed, the improved irrigating and other pumps, the all steel pole saw—one of the most popular things we ever put out—the steel storage and stock tanks. Everything we have touched we have bettered and cheapened. It is the thing we have delighted in as it has paid. We have established a score of branch houses, so as to have all these goods near those who want them. The Aermotor Co. has but one more ambition. It wants to build and fill one more new building. It has 2 acres of land at its present location unoccupied by buildings. It expects to commence in June to cover that 2 acres with a single building, 7 stories high. This will give it 14 more acres of floor space. Then when the public demand requires more goods than can be produced with this added space, it will refuse to extend further, or make any effort. It will have done its share to supply that demand. It will then turn away all newcomers. UNTIL THAT TIME IT EXPECTS TO CONTINUE TO SUPPLY THE WORLD WITH THE GREATER PART OF ITS WIND WHEELS, TOWERS, GRINDERS, FEED CUTTERS, PUMPS, STEEL FRAME BUZZ SAWS, STEEL STORAGE AND STOCK TANKS, STEEL SUBSTRUCTURES, ETC., ETC., GALVANIZED AFTER COMPLETION. IT WILL CONTINUE TO DEAL MOST LIBERALLY WITH THE PUBLIC, FURNISH REPAIRS AT A LOW PRICE, AND BE THE GREAT MODEL SQUARE-DEALING WIND POWER AND WATER SUPPLY HOUSE OF THE WORLD. AERMOTOR CO., CHICAGO.

THE JILTING OF JANE

As I sit writing in my study, I can hear our Jane bumping her way down stairs with a brush and dustpan. She used in the old days to sing hymns tunes, or the British national song for the time being, to these instruments, but latterly she has been silent and even careful over her work. Time was when I prayed with fervor for such silence, and my wife with sighs for such care, but now they have come we are not so glad as we might have anticipated we should be. Indeed, I would rejoice secretly, though it may be unmanly weakness to admit it, even to hear Jane sing "Daisy" or by the fracture of any plate, but one of Mariana's best green ones, to learn that the period of brooding has come to an end.

Yet how we longed to hear the last of Jane's young man before we heard the last of him! Jane was always very free with her conversation to my wife, and discoursed admirably in the kitchen on a variety of topics—so well, indeed, that I sometimes left my study door open—our house is a small one—to partake of it. But after William came it was always William, nothing but William; William this and William that; and when we thought William was worked out and exhausted altogether, then William all over again. The engagement lasted altogether 3 years; yet how she got introduced to William, and so became thus saturated with him, was always a secret. For my part, I believe it was the street corner where the Rev. Barnabas Baux used to the open-air service after evensong on Sundays. Young Cupids were wont to flit like moths around the paraffin flare of that center of High church hymn-singing, I fancy she stood singing hymns, there, out of memory and her imagination, instead of coming home to get supper, and William came up beside her and said, "Hello!" Hello, yourself," she said, and etiquette being satisfied they together.

As Mariana has a reprehensible way of letting her servants talk to her proceeded to talk together she soon heard of him. "He's such a respectable young man, ma'am," said Jane, "you don't know." Ignoring the slur cast on her acquaintance, my wife inquired further about this William.

"He is second porter at Maynard's, the draper's," said Jane, "and gets 18 shillings—nearly a pound—a week, m'm, and when the head porter leaves he will be head porter. His relatives are quite superior people, m'm. Not laboring people at all. His father was a green grosher, m'm, and had a chumor, and he was bankrup' twice. And one of his sisters is in a Home for the Dying. It will be a very good match for me, ma'am," said Jane, "me being an orphan girl."

"Then you are engaged to him?" asked my wife.

"Not engaged, ma'am, but he is saving money to buy a ring—hammyfist."

"Well, Jane, when you are properly engaged to him you may ask him round here on Sunday afternoons, and have tea with him in the kitchen." For my Mariana has a motherly conception of her duty towards her maid servants. And presently the amethystine ring was being worn about the house, even with ostentation, and Jane developed a new way of bringing in the joint, so that this gage was evident. The elder Miss Maitland was aggrieved by it, and told my wife that servants ought not to wear rings. But my wife looked it up in "Enquire Within," and Mrs. Motherly's Book of Household Management," and found no prohibition. So Jane remained with this happiness added to her love.

The treasure of Jane's heart appeared to me to be what respectable people call a very deserving young man. "William, ma'am," said Jane, one day, suddenly, with ill-concealed complacency, as she counted out the beer bottles, "William, ma'am, is a teetotaller. Yes, m'm; and he don't smoke. Smoking, ma'am," said Jane, who reads the heart, "do make such a dust about. Besides the waste of money. And the smell. However, I suppose it's necessary to some."

Possibly it dawned on Jane that she was reflecting a little severely upon Mariana's comparative ill-fortune, and she added kindly: "I'm sure the master is a hangel when his pipe's alight. Compared to other times."

William was at first a rather shabby young man of the heavy-made black coat school of costume. He had watery gray eyes and a complexion appropriate to the brother of one in a home for the dying. Mariana did not fancy him very much, even at the beginning. His eminent respectability was vouched for by an alpaca umbrella, from which he never allowed himself to be parted.

"He goes to chapel," said Jane. His papa, ma'am—"

"His what, Jane?"

"His papa, ma'am, was Church; but Mr. Maynard is a Plymouth Brother, and William thinks it policy, ma'am, to go there too. Mr. Maynard comes and talks to him quite friendly when they ain't busy, about using up all the ends of string, and about his soul. He takes a lot of notice, to Mr. Maynard, of William, and the way he saves string and his soul, ma'am."

Presently we heard that the head porter at Maynard's had left, and that William was head porter at 23 shillings a week. He's really kind of over the man who drives the van," said Jane. "and him married with three children." And she promised in the her heart to make interest for us with William to favor us so that we might get our parcels of drapery from Maynard's with exceptional promptitude.

After this promotion increasing prosperity came upon him... Jane's young man. One day he learned that Mr. Maynard had given William a book. "Smiles 'Elp Yourself,' it's called," said Jane, "but it ain't comic! It tells you how to get on in the world, and some what William read to me was lovely, ma'am."

Mariana told me of this laughing, and then she became suddenly grave. "Do you know, dear," she said. "Jane said one thing I do not like. She had been quiet for a minute, and then she suddenly remarked, "William is a lot above me, ma'am, ain't he?"

"I don't see anything in that," I said though later my eyes were to be opened.

One Sunday afternoon about that time I was sitting at my writing-desk—possibly I was reading a good book—when a something went by the window. I heard a startled exclamation behind me, and saw Mariana with her hands clasped together and her eyes dilated. "George," she said, in an awe stricken whisper, "did you see?"

Then we both spoke to one another at the same moment, slowly and solemnly: "A silk hat! Yellow gloves! A new umbrella!"

"It may be my fancy, dear," said Mariana, "but his tie was very like yours. I believe Jane keeps him in ties. She told me a little while ago in a way that implied volumes about the rest of your costume, 'The master do wear pretty ties, ma'am.' And he echoes all your novelties."

The young couple passed our window again on her way to their customary walk. They were arm-in-arm. Jane looked exquisitely proud, happy and uncomfortable, with new white cotton gloves, and William in the silk hat singularly genteel.

That was the culmination of Jane's happiness. When she returned, "Mr. Maynard has been talking to William, ma'am," she said, "and he is to serve customers just like the young shop gentlemen, during the next sale. And if he gets on, he is to be made an assistant, ma'am at the first opportunity. He has got to be as gentlemanly as he can, ma'am, and if he ain't ma'am, he says, it won't be for want of trying. Mr. Maynard has taken a great fancy to him."

"He is getting on, Jane," said my wife.

"Yes, ma'am," said Jane, thoughtfully, "he is getting on."

And she sighed.

That next Sunday, as I drank my tea, I interrogated my wife. "How is this Sunday different from all other Sundays, little woman? What has happened? Have you altered the curtains, or rearranged the furniture, or where is the indefinable difference of it? Are you wearing your hair in a new way without warning me? I clearly perceive a change in my environment, and I cannot for the life of me say what it is."

Then my wife answered in her most tragic voice: "George," she said, "that—that William has not come near the place to-day! And Jane is crying her heart out up stairs."

There followed a period of silence. Jane, as I have said, stopped singing about the house and began to care for our brittle possessions, which struck my wife as being a very sad sign indeed. The next Sunday, and the next, Jane asked to go out "to walk with William," and my wife, who never attempts to extort confidences, gave her permission and asked no questions. On each occasion Jane came back looking flushed and very determined. At last one day she became communicative.

"William is being led away," she remarked, abruptly, with a catching of breath, apropos of tablecloths.

"Yes, m'm. She is a milliner, and she can play on the piano."

"I thought," said my wife, "that you went out with him on Sunday."

"Not out with him, m'm; after him. I walked along by the side of them and told her he was engaged to me."

"Dear me, Jane, did you? what did they do?"

"Took no more notice of me than if I was dirt. So I told her she should suffer for it."

"It could not have been a very agreeable walk, Jane?"

"Not for no parties, ma'am."

"I wish," said Jane, "I could play the piano, ma'am. But, anyhow, I don't mean to let her get him away from me. She's older than him, and her hair ain't gold to the roots, ma'am."

It was on the August bank holiday that the crisis came. We do not clearly know the details of the fray but only such fragments as poor Jane let fall. She came home dusty, excited and with her heart hot within her.

The milliner's mother, the milliner and William had made a party to the Art Museum at South Kensington, I think. Anyhow, Jane had calmly, but firmly accosted them somewhere in the streets, and asserted her right to what, in spite of the consensus of literature, she held to be her inalienable property. She did, I think, go as far as to lay hands on him. They dealt with her in a crushingly superior way. They "called a cab." There was a "scene." William being pulled away in to the four-wheeler by his future wife and mother-in-law from the reluctant hands of our discarded Jane. There were threats of giving her "in charge."

"My poor Jane!" said my wife, mincing veal as though she was mincing William. "It's a shame of them. I would think no more of him. He is not worthy of you."

"No, m'm" said Jane. "He is weak."

"But it's that woman has done it," said Jane. She was never known to bring herself to pronounce "that woman's" name or to admit her girlishness. "I can't think what minds some women must have—to try and get a girl's young man away from her. But there, it only hurts to talk about it," said Jane.

Thereafter the house rested from William. But there was something in the manner of Jane's scrubbing the front doorstep, or sweeping out the rooms a certain viciousness, that persuaded me that the story had not yet ended.

"Please, m'm, may I go and see a wedding to-morrow?" said Jane one day.

My wife knew by instinct whose wedding "Do you think it wise, Jane?" she said.

"I would like to see the last of him," said Jane.

"My dear," said my wife, fluttering into my room about twenty minutes after Jane had started, "Jane has been to the boot hole and taken all the left-off boots and shoes and gone off to the wedding with them in a bag. Surely, she can not mean——"

"Jane," I said, "is developing character. Let us hope for the best."

Jane came back with a pale, hard face. All the boots seemed to be still in her bag, at which my wife heaved a premature sigh of relief. We heard her go upstairs and replace the boots with considerable emphasis.

"Quite a crowd at the wedding, ma'am," she said, presently, in a purely conversational style, sitting in our little kitchen, and scrubbing the potatoes; "and such a lovely day for them," She proceeded to numerous other details, clearly avoiding some, cardinal incidents.

"It was all extremely respectable and nice, ma'am; but her father didn't wear a black coat, and looked quite out of place, ma'am, Mr. Piddingquirk——"

"Who?"

"Mr. Piddingquirk—William, that was, ma'am,—had white gloves and a coat like a clergyman, and a lovely chrysanthemum. He looked so nice, ma'am. And there was a red carpet down, just like for gentlefolks. And they say he gave the clerk four shillings, ma'am. It was a real kerridge they had—not a fly. When they came out of church there was rice-throwing and her two little sisters dropping dead flowers. And some one threw a slipper, and then I threw a boot——"

"Threw a boot, Jane!"

"Yes, ma'am. Aimed at her. But it hit him. Yes, ma'am, hard. Gev him a black eye, I should think. I only threw that one. I hadn't the heart to try it again. All the little boys cheered when it hit him."

After an interval. "I am sorry the boot hit him."

Another pause. The potatoes were being scrubbed violently. "He always was a bit above me, you know ma'am. And he was led away."

The potatoes were more than finished, Jane rose sharply with a sigh, and rapped the basin down on the table.

"I don't care," she said. "I don't care a rap. He will find out his mistake yet. It serves me right. I was stuck up about him, I ought not to have looked so high. And I am glad things are as things are."

My wife was in the kitchen seeing to the high cookery. After the confession of the boot-throwing she must have watched poor Jane fuming with a certain dismay in those brown eyes of hers. But I imagine they softened again very quickly, and then Jane's must have met them

"Oh, ma'am," said Jane, with an astonished change of note. "Think of all that might have been. Oh, ma'am! I could have been so happy. I ought to have known, but I didn't know. • • • You're very kind to let me talk to you, ma'am • • • it's har-r-r-rr——"

And I gather that Mariana so far forgot herself as to let Jane sob out some of the fulness of her heart on a sympathetic shoulder. My Mariana thank heaven, has never properly grasped the importance of "keeping up her position." And since that fit of weeping much of the accent of bitterness has gone out of Jane's scrubbing and brush work.

Indeed something passed the other day with the butcher boy, but that scarcely belongs to this story. However, Jane is young still, and time and change are at work with her. We all have our sorrows, but I do not believe very much in the permanency of broken hearts.

FAKE STOPS IN THE ORGAN.

Of all musical instruments known in the present day the organ is undoubtedly the "king." Not only in its complicated and ingenious mechanism or in its wonderful control by one performer, but in its powers of expression and imitation of the various instruments of the orchestra it is unexcelled. Unlike other instruments that are perfected both in voice and simplified methods of playing—such as the violin, flute, clarionet, etc., the organ, as it now stands, is still open to considerable improvement, both in mechanical and acoustic principles. To trace back its history as far as even "Father Smith" and "Renatus Harris" (1684) in their competition for the organ at the Temple church, London, England, and then trace up to the present day, noting all the real gradual improvements, would be an interesting and laborious work; but our object now is to take a glance at the modern instrument and enable us in choosing the very best, both musically and economically; by the latter we do not mean parsimony of haggling for a bargain but making the most of the means, whether it proceeds from contributions or gifts. As our churches are the disbursers of the funds, very often perseveringly collected under not very encouraging circumstances, it will be as well to understand what is really required and what is to be rejected.

The word "stop" means a "set" or "rank" of pipes—one to every key on the keyboard. The word does not refer in any way to the "knob" that the organist pulls out or pushes in. It seems necessary to explain this, as many persons are unaware of it; and are dazzled by the amount of "knobs" they get for the money, and say, "Oh, our organ has thirty stops, and cost so and so," and "such a one's has thirty-six and cost only half that sum." Now, in almost every specification received from organ builders a certain number of "fake" stops are announced in order to make it appear a great deal for the money. Among them are certain "mechanical" contrivances, which produce certain effects on the mechanism only, while others are used to affect the speech of the pipes. Others again are mere "clap-trap," and as a rule where these are inserted the tender may be put in the fire, as the builder is untrustworthy.

An idea may be formed of the uselessness of some of these by the number of them run into a parlor organ. In the latter one may find eleven "stops," and actually only two rows of reeds. 122 in number therefore really only two stops, divided into treble and bass to swell the number to four—the remainder being made up of mechanical "clap-trap." In the organ a good many of these "accessories" are included as stops. Now, let us examine them. Among the really necessary mechanical "knobs" may be noticed the various "couplers;" these act on the keys and enable the player to get the power of two or more rows of keys with one pair of hands.

Hats With Money in Them.

The other day a Sun reporter saw a small boy run out of Chinatown pursued by a bare-headed Chinaman. The boy held a soft hat in his hands, which was presumably the property of the Chinaman.

As the boy turned the corner of the street he threw the hat into an unoccupied basement. The Chinaman immediately stopped running and skipped nimbly into the cellar after his hat. On his reappearance on the sidewalk his face was a picture of despair. He looked for the boy, but in vain. He explained in broken English that he had $30 in bills inside the band of the hat, and that the money was gone.

A neighboring storekeeper said that in the last week several Chinamen had suffered in a similar manner. It appears that they have a habit of carrying money inside their hatbands. The small boys have discovered this fact, and under the pretense of teasing the Chinamen they have been snatching their headgear. While running they abstract the money and then, so as to insure their escape, they throw the hats into a basement. By the time the Chinaman understands the situation the boy is out of sight.—New York Sun.

Vaccinating a Fire Brigade.

Yesterday morning an outbreak of fire occurred in one of the wards of the smallpox hospital in Parkhill road, and information was sent to the central fire station. Superintendent Willis, and a contingent of firemen and members of the salvage corps went to the institution, and the fire, which was not of a serious character, was soon extinguished. Mr. Willis and Inspector Smith, of the salvage corps, and the men were about to return to headquarters when they were told that they could not leave the hospital until all had been vaccinated. The operation was duly carried out, and fresh clothes were sent for, in order that those the men were wearing at the time might be thoroughly disinfected.—Liverpool Mercury.

The air-tight compartment theory of building ships was copied from a provision of nature shown in the case of the nautilus. The shell of this animal has forty or fifty compartments into which air or water may be admitted to allow the occupant to sink or float, as he pleases.

DICKEN'S DENOUMENTS.

It is curious what a penchant Dickens had for certain melodramatic situations, which seemed to his fancy so telling that he repeated and reproduced them many times over. He had a lively dramatic turn, and I have always thought would have had extraordinary success as a dramatist. I once asked him why he had not taken up this "line" seriously, and I think he made the excuse—it was long ago, many years before his death—that he had not time, taste or patience. The real reason, no doubt, was that he could not work without expanding, and would not "carve heads upon a cherry stone."

A literary friend who has his "Boz" at his finger ends, has with great acuteness pointed out to me that Nicholas Nickleby was a genuine "Adelphi walking gentleman," his manner, heroic bursts, protection of his sister, bearding of Ralph, etc., were all elements in the Adelphi melodrama. Ralph was a regular stage villain. That his works are all dramatic and conceived in the true spirit of the stage is plain from the vast list of adaptions. Each story has been adapted again, and will bear the process admirably.

One method of winding up his plot to which he was exceedingly partial, was the unmasking of the villain owing to the betrayal of some confederate. The parties are generally brought together in a room by the more virtuous members; the confederate then emerges from his concealment and tells a long story of villainy. This denouement is seen first in "Oliver Twist," where Monks makes his revelations. In "Nickleby" Ralph is confronted with "the man Snawley" and Squeers.

In "The Old Curiosity Shop" Quilp is similarly exposed. In "Barnaby Rudge" Haredale forces his hereditary enemy to make revelations. In "Chuzzlewit" Jonas is confronted with another betrayer. In "Copperfield" Uriah Heap is denounced and exposed by Mr. Micawber. In "Bleak House," Lady Deadlock is similarly tracked. In nearly all the cases the guilty person goes off and commits suicide.—Gentleman's Magazine.

A Few Hints to Girls on the Treatment of the Hair.

A girl's hair is one of her points of beauty, and it should never be neglected. Regular steady brushing of the hair with a clean brush, fifty strokes before going to bed at night, twenty-five in the morning when dressing, will keep the hair thick, smooth, soft and lovely. Once a month at least the tips of the hair should be clipped off, just the merest tip-ends at the edges, and once a month the head should be carefully washed with tepid water and soap, thoroughly rubbed and well dried. If mamma has time to take this sort of care of her daughter's hair, she will be repaid by seeing rich and flowing tresses or sisters may easily do it for one another. Do not cut your hair in bangs. It is very much prettier simply parted and combed back plainly, then braided in one or two long tails and tied with a ribbon. Avoid essences, oils and pigments; the hair needs only cleanliness and much brushing. Keep your hairbrush clean by frequently dipping it into a bath of hot water and ammonia and drying it in the sun. Everything used in treating the hair must be scrupulously neat.

It is nice for a girl to have dainty toilet articles if she can. Silver, china and ivory are beautiful on one's dressing table, but if one has not these she can still keep everything that belongs to her in perfect order if she will only take pains, and order is itself beauty. Have a linen cover for your bureau or table prettily embroidered and always add as a finishing touch a little vase of flowers.—Harper's Young People.

The Use of the Hump.

There are some men in this work who can answer any question that is put to them, and sometimes when they do not really know what they are talking about, they will give answers that are not at all bad. One of these persons was once a keeper of the London zoo. He was pestered to death by the questions which people asked, but he always gave an answer. On a recent occasion a countryman strolled in, and after looking curiously at the camel for a few moments, he turned to the keeper and said:

"I say, mister, what's he have a hump for?"

"What does he have a hump for?" repeated the keeper.

"Yes. What's the good of it?" asked the visitor.

"Why—er—it makes a camel of him, of course," replied the keeper, after some hesitation. "People wouldn't travel miles to see him if he didn't have that hump. Fact is, without it he might as well be a cow."

The stranger departed very well satisfied.—Harper's Young People.

Clipping the Churches.

A Warwickshire correspondent, in "Howe's Every-Day Book," says: "When I was a child as sure as Easter Monday came I was taken to see the children clip the churches. This ceremony was performed amid crowds of people and shouts of joy, by the children of the different charity schools who, at a certain hour, flocked together for the purpose. The first comers placed themselves hand in hand with their backs against the church, and were joined by their companions, who gradually increased in number till at last the chain was of sufficient length completely to surround the edifice. As soon as the hand of the last of the train had grasped that of the first the party broke up and walked in procession to the next church, where the ceremony was repeated."

An Intelligent Parrot.

There is said to be in Portland a parrot which is entitled to more respect for both character and intelligence than its owner, who took the bird to a pawnbroker's to get money to buy rum. As the inebriate was departing with the money, so goes the story the parrot called out from the back shop: "Say, Bill, am I here for life?" The moral is that everybody is sized up and sometimes even by the birds.—Lewiston Journal.

Didn't Like His Company.

Mamma, in the parlor with company, left Nellie upstairs with her dolls. A storm coming up, she called her mother and told her she was afraid to stay alone. The mother coaxed her to go back, telling her that the Lord was with her and would keep her from all harm. She returned to her play, but soon called again: "Oh, mamma, I'm afraid yet. You come up here and stay with the Lord. I'd rather stay downstairs with the company."

Spring Cleaning

Is such a trial that men say, "Let the house take care of itself." But the conscientious wife feels bound to risk health and strength in this annual struggle with dust and dirt. The consequence of her feverish anxiety over extra work is depletion of the blood, the source of all life and strength, manifested in that weak, tired, nervous condition too prevalent at this season and very dangerous if allowed to continue. What every man and woman needs in the spring is Hood's Sarsaparilla. It keeps the blood vitalized and enriched, and thus sustains the nerves and all the bodily functions.

"I take Hood's Sarsaparilla every spring, and it is the only medicine I use through the year. It enables me to do my house cleaning and farm work all through the summer. It helped me very much for palpitation of the heart. I think Hood's Sarsaparilla is the medicine for everyone and all who take it will never be without it. I have also used Hood's Pills and they are the best I ever tried." MRS. F. H. ANDREWS, S. Woodstock, Ct. Get Hood's, because Paper Stockings.

With stockings and socks made of paper, the latter to be sold at 3c a pair, the work of the darner and the laundress both are considerably diminished. Up to this time the expense of splitting twisting and preparing paper yarns for commercial use has been so high that manufacturers of fabrics have found little inducement to use them in making textiles. Lately, however, a number of paper-pulp manufacturers have been at work on the problem of producing cheap pulp yarns, with the result that a new process has been formulated. The old method of splitting twisting, etc., has been done away with, and a much simpler and inexpensive mode has been adopted.

Deafness Can Not Be Cured

by local applications, as they can not reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure Deafness and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube gets inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that can not be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

A good housekeeper knows that poor cooking utensils are never cheap at any price. Cheap tinware, for instance, is a delusion and a snare. Some of it is absolutely poisonous, and the tin wears out in a very short time leaving the rusty iron composition to ruin everything that is put in it. Never cook anything sour or tart like fruit or tomatoes in a vessel that is beginning to show rust, as it will ruin the flavor.

Sweet Content.

Now that the silent budding trees and the advent of myriads of merry songsters herald the welcome springtime, many an energetic house-mother in her mental calculations for cleaning and renovating her house (and we believe the calculating and planning done beforehand is the correct first step that lessens much after labor in the general metamorphosis), thinks of many a new article she so much desires, either for decoration or comfort. Why enumerate when each heart knoweth its own wishes? And yet, how few will manage, with all their calculation, to secure all or even half they deem necessary.

These are hard times, and the wife who gets only what she can pay for, and resigns the rest uncomplainingly, and who by washing, turning, darning, and renovating makes the old articles endure another year, rather than make debts to harrass one, or use money otherwise appropriated and that will cause regrets, is a heroine, and we firmly believe there will be many such heroines this spring.

When we remember the destitution that the brave people out west have faced during the past months, and that midst all their innumerable discouragement they are ready to "try again," and when we count up "our own mareles," as an old grandma used to say, it isn't so very hard to resign some cherished plan after all, is it?

We all know "if we cannot have what we like we must like what we have," and it is a great blessing to be able to say from the heart:

Content's an elf who with me dwells;
Her heart of light ne'er ill foretells,
Tho' clouds obscure the fairest skies,
She looks on all with cheerful eyes.—

What an ordinary man eats and the way he eats it would be enough to give dyspepsia to an ostrich—unless the ostrich were wise enough to assist his digestion from time to time with an efficient combination of vegetable extracts. Such a preparation is Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. They are the pills par excellence for those who sometimes eat the wrong things and too much. They stimulate action in all of the digestive organs. They stop sour stomach, windy belchings, heartburn, flatulence and cure constipation, biliousness, dyspepsia, indigestion, sick headache and kindred derangements.

Once used they are always in favor.

THEY WERE CUNNING

NICARAGUANS TRY TO PLAY A TRICK ON THE BRITISH.

They Succeed in Securing the Aid of the United States in Adjusting the Dispute, and Then Back Out at the Last Moment.

London, April 30. — The United State attempted to adjust the pending dispute between Great Britain and Nicaragua. Ambassador Bayard, acting under instructions from Washington, represented to the British foreign office that Nicaragua, if given two weeks additional time from the expiration of the three days fixed in the ultimatum, would meet Great Britain's demand for the payment of £15,000 indemnity for the expulsion of Consul Hatch. Lord Kimberly acceded to this, and as it was presumed that the state department at Washington was acting for Nicaragua it was thought that the incident would be closed without further complications. But as Nicaragua refused at the last moment to acquiesce in this arrangement, the original plan of occupying Corinto was carried out. It is now believed here that Nicaragua secured the intermediation of the United State for the sole purpose of delay.

Washington, April 30.—The state department has been officially notified of the landing of the British troops at Corinto. The events of the day in diplomatic circles here were the landing of the British troops at Corinto, Nicaragua, the abandonment of the town by the native officials and the population and the shrewd move of the Nicaraguans in declaring Corinto a closed port. Dr. Guzman, the Nicaraguan minister here, received two cablegrams from his government forwarded from San Juan del Sur, the Nicaraguan cable port, about 125 miles south of Corinto. The first stated that the British troops had landed at Corinto and that the British flag was flying over the town, which had been deserted by the Nicaraguan officials and the native inhabitants. The second cablegram showed that the authorities had gone to San Juan del Sur, cutting the wires connecting the cable port with Corinto, so that the British forces at the latter place could not communicate with their home government except by sending a boat to the cable station. The main body of the Nicaraguans who had abandoned Corinto had crossed a lagoon which separates the town from the mainland and had strongly entrenched themselves.

San Jose, Costa Rica, April 30.—It is learned here authoritatively that the Central American republics, Guatemala, San Salvador and Costa Rica, strongly urged Nicaragua to pay the $75,000 indemnity to Great Britain. President Yglesias even went so far as to offer to pay one-fifth of the amount, but popular sentiment in Nicaragua was so set against England that the administration decided not to yield, and the only response received by President Yglesias to his offer was a copy of Nicaragua's answer to Admiral Stephenson's ultimatum.

Charged With Murder.

Perry, Okla., April 30.—Officers have arrested Bob Dupont, alias Jake Black, in Osage Nation, for a murder committed near Lexington, Ky., in 1890. Black was courting Dennis Lang's daughter, and went home with her one night from church. Lang objected to Black's attentions to his daughter and met the couple at the gate. A quarrel ensued and Black shot and killed Lang. He escaped and came West, settling in Osage Nation, where he married and became quite wealthy. A large reward was offered for his arrest and yesterday it was accomplished.

For Contempt.

Sioux City, Iowa, April 30.—District Judge Wakefield made an order today for the arrest of Ald. H. H. Johnson on a charge of contempt of court. Johnson was administrator of the estate of Abel Moe, deceased. He has never made a report, and last December Moe's widow secured an order directing him to do so. Johnson refused, and to-day Mrs. Moe secured an order for his arrest. His hearing was set for May 4, pending which he was released on bond.

Where Might Mr. Smith Be?

Astoria, Or., April 30.—There is considerable excitement here over the disappearance of ex-Sheriff H. A. Smith. He left this city about three weeks ago for Portland having in his possession county warrants to the amount of $40,100. It has been learned that he cashed warrants in Portland for $3,600 on the 12th inst., and was last seen on the following day. The reason of his flight is a mystery.

Trumped Up, Say They.

Whitehall, Wis., April 30.—Edward Andrus, the Lawrence university student charged with being an accessory to the murder of his sister's child, was brought from Appleton and the examination set for May 1. Both father and son are in jail and say the charge is trumped up and that they cannot be convicted.

Fire in a Factory.

Chicago, April 30. — The furniture factory of L. M. Hamline & Co. was destroyed and the plant of Freese & Peters, manufacturers of sinks and refrigerators, was badly damaged by fire this morning. Loss, $50,000.

Driven to His Death.

Cheyenne, Wyo., April 30.—Corporal Henry, of Company D, Eighth infantry, stationed at Fort Russell, committed suicide by shooting himself with an army rifle. He placed the gun on the ground and pulled the trigger with the ramrod, the ball flying through the lower part of the jaw and coming out at the top of his head, killing him instantly. His comrades accused him of being the Cheyenne Oscar Wilde, and the accusation preyed upon his mind until he decided to end his existence.

MANY LIVES LOST.

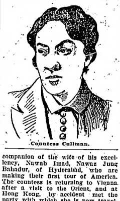
Epinal, France, April 30.—The great Bousey dyke of the Epinal district of the Vosges burst and a great rush of water and much loss of life followed. The indications are that the loss of life will be very heavy. Enormous damage has been done in the surrounding country. The railways in all directions are interrupted and a large number of villages are entirely flooded. In a single commune, that of Uxegeny, seven kilometers from the scene of the disaster proper, twenty-three persons were drowned. At Nomexy eight bodies have been found. Wherever the water flowed it destroyed everything in its path. The village of Bousey, with its extensive pisciculture establishment, has disappeared. At Darnieulles all the houses were destroyed and only a few were spared at Auxiorges. Hundreds of families have been rendered homeless, and many who were asleep at the time lost their clothes. The damage done by the flood was immense, and it is believed will amount to $10,000,000.

The list of fatalities increases every hour. One hundred and fifteen deaths have already been reported, but only fifty bodies have been recovered. It is believed that the death list will be greatly in excess of the figures above given when all the districts are heard from. It is supposed that many of the dead were swept into isolated places where it will be a long time before the bodies are found. The whole region over which the thousands of tons of water swept in a resistless flood, is strewn with every sort of wreckage, and the whole country presents a most desolate appearance. In many places the early crops were swept clean out of the ground, and the losses thus incurred will be very heavy.

Six brigades of gendarmes have arrived and they have been detailed to act as guards. Every attempt is being made to reorganize the district, but this is rendered difficult by the waters. The Aviere, a small stream, is now in some places a mile and a half wide. The railway in the vicinity of the Darnieulles station was torn up. Railroad ties were swept away, and the embankments destroyed. Nearly every bridge in the line of the flood was either destroyed or so badly damaged that they will have to be rebuilt.

DISTINGUISHED FOREIGNERS.

Countess Cullman Returning to Her Home in Austria.



Countess Cullman.

New York, April 30.—Countess Cullman, who is among the distinguished Europeans now traveling in this country, has reached New York. Her husband holds a high position in the Austrian court. Though not one of the party she has been the traveling companion of the wife of his excellency, Nawab Imad, Nawaz Jung Bahadur, of Hyderabad, who are making their first tour of America. The countess is returning to Vienna after a visit to the Orient, and at Hong Kong, by accident met the party with which she is now traveling. She will accompany them to Europe.

FIVE SHOTS A SECOND.

New Magazine Breech-Loading Rifle Tested at Des Moines.

Des Moines, April 30.—The working model of a magazine breech-loading rifle was operated here to-day. The inventor is Dr. S. N. McClean of Washington, Iowa, and the model was made in this city. The invention has a very novel structural plan. All its operating parts are made to move in and through a series of guides or tracks so that the movement of each part is positive and is susceptible of the highest possible speed. It has a reciprocating handle, a breech piece, a cartridge magazine formed to receive its entire load of cartridges at one insertion, and these parts are so connected with the actuating handle that a single back and forth movement accomplishes the loading and firing of the weapon.

Such is the wonderful firing speed of this rifle that the magazine can be emptied of its six cartridges before the first cartridge has time to reach the ground, so that all the shells are in the air at the same time. Its speed is from six to ten times greater than that of any other rifle. The Kraig-Yorgensen, the new United States military rifle, the Lee-speed of England, the Mouser rifle of France and the Needle gun of Germany, which are considered the leading military rifles of the world, have a firing speed of about one shot in two seconds, while this rifle has an easy speed of five shots per second.

A Crumb for Depositors.

Milwaukee, April 30. — Receiver Barth, of the South Side Savings bank, authorizes the statement that a dividend of 5 per cent will be paid about May 1. This will make, altogether, 10 per cent that has been paid to depositors. There are about 3,000 depositors. The amount of claims proven against the bank is $1,304,280.33. The nominal value of the assets is $780,642.65, and the liabilities, deducting the payments already made, amount to $1,247,364.50. Cashier Koetting will be placed on trial again next month.

JACK THE RIPPER.

THE MYSTERY REGARDING THE MURDERER IS CLEARED.

The Perperator of the Sensational Whitechapel Murders Was Once a Prominent London Physician—A Dr. Jeckyl and Mr. Hyde.

San Francisco, April 26.—Dr. Howard, a London physician of considerable prominence, was the guest of William Greer Harrison at the Bohemian club recently. The Englishman told a singular story to his host, and vouched for it in every particular. It related to the mystery of "Jack the Ripper," which the physician declared was no longer a mystery among the scientific men of London, nor the detectives of Scotland Yard. He said that this assassin was a medical man of high standing and extensive practice. He was married to a beautiful and amiable wife, and had a family. Shortly before the beginning of the Whitechapel murders he developed a peculiar, and to his wife, inexplicable mania—an unnatural pleasure in causing pain. She grew so alarmed that she became afraid of him, and locked herself and children up when she saw the mood coming over him.

When he recovered from the paroxysms and she spoke to him about it, he laughed at her fears. Then the Whitechapel murders filled London with horror. The suspicions of the wife were aroused, and as one assassination succeeded another she noted with heartbreaking dread that at the periods when these murders were supposed to have been committed her husband was invariably absent from home. At last the suspense and fear of the wretched wife became unbeatable and she went to a few of her husband's medical friends, stated the case and asked their advice and assistance.

Placed in an Asylum.

They called the Scotland Yard force to assist them, and by adding one fact to another the chain of evidence pointing to the doctor as the author of the murders became complete. The physicians visited the murderer and told him they wished to consult him about a remarkable case. They stated his own in detail and asked him what should be done under the circumstances. He replied that while the unmistakable insanity of the person who could commit these crimes would save him from the halter, he should certainly be confined in a lunatic asylum. Then they told him that he himself was the maniac who had done these dreadful acts. He declared the impossibility of the accusation, but confessed that of late years there were gaps of twenty-four hours in which he positively had no recollection. He said he had awakened in his rooms, as if from a stupor, and he found blood on his boots and stains of blood on his hands. He had also scratches upon his face, and his amputating knives had shown signs of use, though he could not recall having assisted at any operation. These doctors then assured him there could be no doubt of his identity with the Whitechapel assassin. They made an exhaustive search of the house, led by the accused, and found ample proof of the murders, and the unhappy man whose mind at that moment was in its normal and clear condition, begged to be removed from the world as a guilty and dangerous monster. The necessary papers were made out and the irresponsible murderer was committed to an insane asylum. In a month or so he lost all semblance of sanity, and is now the most intractible and dangerous madman confined in the institution.

Trouble Over a Tombstone.

Sioux Falls, S. D., April 26.—G. A. Powell, agent for the John Melquist Marble Works of Sioux City, who was recently in trouble in Sioux Falls, has been arrested for "violation of a sepulcher." It seems that Mrs. M. J. McGillivary of Madison, after her husband's death, ordered a $300 tombstone through Powell. Some time later she sent a countermand of the order to Mr. Melquist of Sioux City and ordered another monument of another firm. Saturday the monument ordered of Melquist was sent to Madison and Powell, as agent, took it to the cemetery and began to make excavations for a foundation for the same. Mrs. McGillivary has had him arrested on the above charge and Powell will fight for the price of the monument.

Life Is Ebbing Away.

Bordentown, N. J., April 26.—It now seems but a question of a few hours until Mrs. Parnell passes away. Since she was attacked by the first convulsion yesterday she has grown rapidly worse and is growing weaker every minute. Dr. Shipps, the attending physician, has given up all hope of saving her life.

Whiteman Held.

New York, April 26. — Alonzo J. Whiteman, who is being held in the tombs to await the arrival of an officer from San Francisco with a warrant charging him with forgery, was arraigned to-day and remanded without a hearing until to-morrow morning. Sheriff McNeill of Dansville, N. Y., was on hand with a warrant to arrest Whiteman for perjury in that city if he should be discharged.

Knights of St. George.

Cedar Rapids, Iowa, April 26.—The Knights of St. George of the United States, the Bohemian religious, benevolent and fraternal organization, are holding a national convention here which will be in session through the week. Many delegates are present.

Charged With Trespass.

Marquette, Mich., April 26—Commissioner Frank Moore has bound over to the United States court for trial two foremen in the employ of the Diamond Match company on a charge of trespass on government land and cutting timber valued at $4,000.

Curfew at Wadena.

Wadena, Minn., April 26.—Wadena has adopted the 9 o'clock curfew bell, and the youngsters are all off the street promptly. So far it works like a charm.

JOHN H. TURNER.

British Columbia's New Premier Given a Reception.

Vancouver, B. C., April 28. — Hon. John H. Turner, the new premier, was given a reception last night by the city government. It was a most brilliant affair, prominent people being present from all parts of British Columbia. Mr. Turner is an Englishman by birth and education. He was born at Clayton, near Ipswich, England, in 1824. He came to Canada when he was twenty-two years of age and started in business at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, and in 1862 went to Victoria, where he engaged in mercantile business and has since remained. He was in the military service years ago and organized volunteer companies to defend Vancouver Island during the Fenian troubles. He retired from the service in 1881, having attained the rank of lieutenant colonel. In 1886 he represented Victoria in the legislature of the providence, being a member of the government faction. He was married in 1860 to Miss Elbech of Cumberland, England.

CHOKED THE CHILD.

A Farmer Near Whitehall, Wis., is Arrested.

Whitehall, Wis., April 28.—Alvah Andrus, a farmer living near Osseo, this county, was brought here today, charged with murdering the infant babe of his daughter, Mabel Andrus Clark. He was arraigned before County Judge Odell and his examination adjourned until May 1.

The story of the crime, as reported by his daughter, who made the complaint, is that on April 28, 1892, when she was but seventeen years old, she gave birth to an illegitimate child at her father's home. Immediately after its birth, it is alleged, he took the child from its mother's side and choked it to death on the bed. In the house at the time, it is said, there were three small children and Edward Andrus, the twenty-one-year-old son of Alvah. Andrus had previously sent some of his family away to friends at Augusta, about ten miles distant. In spite of the girl's pleas to spare the life of the child, it was strangled and the body was buried near the barn, and the father threatened that the girl would be hung if she ever told about the affair.

District Attorney Ekern and Under Sheriff Frederickson visited the premises yesterday and made an unsuccessful search for the child's body.

Edward Andrus, the son, is now a student at Lawrence university at Appleton, this state, where he is studying for the ministry. The sheriff has gone there to arrest him as an accessory to his father's crime. The elder Andrus is now in jail here. The son has borne a good reputation.

Appleton, Wis., April 28. — Edwin Andrus left Appleton this morning in company with a stranger, who is supposed to have been an officer. The man called very early at the house of Janitor Carpenter, of Lawrence university, where Andrus has a room. If he was arrested no one in Appleton knows anything about it. He left word that he was going home and would be gone three or four days. President Plantz and other officers of Lawrence university, where Edwin Andrus has been a student for the past five years, were greatly shocked to learn that he was under suspicion of being an accessory in the crime.

FRACTIOUS MILITIAMEN

Guilty of Insubordination and Assault on a Sergeant.

Sioux Falls, S. D., April 28. — If a certain member of Company F, S. D. N. G., located at Aberdeen, is not punished severely it will most likely be because the state has not enough money on hand to call a court martial and there is no appropriation available. A sergeant and a squad was sent out to bring an absentee to the armory, and they did it. Not, however, without considerable trouble, for the angry member not only refused to go, but abused his sergeant and assaulted him. At the armory the captive continued his wordy abuse of his superior officers, an offense which is punishable by a fine and imprisonment in the county jail, or even in the penitentiary. But as was mentioned, the offender will likely get off with a dishonorable discharge, as no regular court martial can be convened.

Life-Taker Saves a Life.

New York, April 28. — Joe Atkinson, who, as executioner at the Tombs hanged forty-six persons, assisted in saving the life of Edward Law, a wholesale tea merchant in Brooklyn who attempted suicide by turning on the gas in his room. Atkinson was passing at the time and broke in the door.

Where Fire Once Swept.

Hinckley, Minn., April 28. — At a meeting last evening arrangements for the dedication as to the new city hall were completed. The ceremony will be elaborate. Among the speakers are to be Rev. D. W. Lynch of Brainerd, Rev. P. Knudson of Pine City, Judge J. C. Nethaway of Stillwater, Hon. H. C. Gridley of Duluth and Attorney R. C. Saunders of Hinckley. Several prominent persons are expected to be present. The dedication will take place on the evening of May 1.

MURDER WILL OUT.

A Crime Committed Sixteen Years Ago Just Comes to Light.

Philadelphia, April 30.—While the larger portion of the population of Philadelphia was attending church, there lay on a desk in a dingy little room down town the skull of a murdered woman. There for six long hours was unfolded a horrible story of crime. The central figure in the story is James E. Logue—known to the police departments of the continent as "Jimmy" Logue, burglar, bank robber and one of the most notorious all-around crooks in the annals of crime. The case turned up on the murder of one of this man's wives, Johanna Logue, but it was a fitting climax to a remarkable tale that proved that he was not her murderer. On the night of Feb. 22, 1879, Johanna Logue vanished as suddenly and as completely as if the earth had opened and swallowed her. The newspapers at the time were full of it, rewards were offered and no one was more indefatigible in his efforts to locate the woman than Logue himself. On Oct. 16, 1893, fourteen years afterward, a carpenter repairing the house at 1250 North Eleventh street, tore up some boards in the kitchen and there found the skeleton of a woman. When it became known that Logue and his wife had lived in the house suspicion at once pointed to him as the murderer, but all search for him proved unavailing. Recently he gave himself up and then caused the arrest of Alphonso Cutaler, Jr., the illegitimate son of one of Logue's alleged wives, on the charge of committing the murder. Cutaler says that the woman was drunk and that he tied her in bed, and that she was smothered while trying to release herself. The story is not believed, and Cutaler is thought to have killed her to secure possession of $2,000 in jewels and $4,000 in money.

WILDE'S TRIAL.

Another Installment of Most Shameful Testimony.

London, April 30—The trial of Oscar Wilde and Alfred Taylor, charged with serious misdemeanors, was resumed at the Old Bailey court to-day, with a large attendance. Alfred Wood was examined and was cross-examined by Sir Edward Clarke, Q. C., counsel for Wilde, but his evidence was not shaken. Frederick Atkins, described as a variety singer, gave evidence as to knowing Alfred Taylor and others mentioned during the trial. When Edward Shelby, the former employe of the publishers, Matthews & Lane, was testifying, and was asked to tell the jury what had occurred at Oscar Wilde's rooms, the witness pathetically appealed to counsel to read it from his previous deposition, and thus spare him the pain of repeating it. Counsel, however, made the witness repeat the story. The day was occupied by the examination of the same witnesses who have already been called to the stand, and the testimony was of the same character as already outlined.

ON THE WARPATH.

Reported Outbreak of Indians in North Dakota.

Winnipeg, April 30. — A Killarney dispatch to the Free Press says reports come in from St. Johns, N. D., just over the Manitoba boundary; that 1,500 Indians and half-breeds are on the warpath, and that 700 women and children are in tents on the prairie. Troops from Fort Totten are ordered to St. Johns. A man named Ross, living near the boundary on the Canadian side, was chased by Indians and had to flee for his life.

Chose Death to Such a Life.

Baker City, Or., April 30.—Near the town of Sumpter, twenty-five miles from here, an awful double murder and suicide occurred last night. To-day the dead bodies of Mrs. Ernest Maywaldt and her two children, aged two years and eight months, respectively, were found in Powder river. It is said the woman was driven to desperation by the ill treatment of her husband, who drank to excess. She chose death to such a life, and took her babies with her.

Nobody Responsible.

Butte, Mont., April 30.—The grand jury called several weeks ago to investigate the disastrous dynamite explosion on Jan. 15, by which fifty-eight men were killed through violation of the law regarding the storage of explosives by Kenyon & Connell and the Butte Hardware company, reported to-day, but returned no indictments, claiming that it was impossible to fix personal responsibility.

Zella Sues George Gould.

New York, April 30. — The World says: Miss Rosa Zella Ruhman, better known as Zella Nicalaus, whose entanglement with the Gould family gave her widespread notoriety, has brought suit in the Hudson county court at Jersey City against George J. Gould for $50,000 damages. Counsellor Simpson has the case in charge and bases his action on malicious persecution.

Did He Embezzle?

Sioux City, Iowa, April 30.—E. O. Ollerman, treasurer of Ponca, a small town near here, was arrested to-day on a charge of embezzlement. Ollerman made his report a few days ago to the outgoing council. The report showed a deficiency of $1,135. Ollerman had just served a term as city treasurer, and had just been re-elected. He was released on $1,000 bonds.

Mutiny in Formosa.

London, April 30.—A dispatch to the Times, from Hong Kong says that serious disturbances have broken out on the Island of Formosa. On April 22 the Chinese soldiers killed their general. The governor's body guard attacked the mutinous soldiers and thirty men were cut to pieces and fifty wounded. The Chinese artillery threaten to fire on any vessel leaving the island with treasure. The savages are coming down from the hills to attack the Chinese, and the position of the whites on the island is critical.

MUSIC IN THE AIR.

A Curious Demonstration In a New York Elevated Railroad Car.

As an up town train on the Sixth avenue elevated road pulled in at the Chambers street station about midnight one night last week the passengers heard sounds of singing. The music came from a group of a dozen people who were standing on the platform, and who got on the second car, filling up the seats at one end of it. They continued to sing, and as the train started on people from the other cars flocked in, filling all the seats and blocking the aisle in their curiosity and interest. The singers paid no heed to their audience. There were three women among them, all young, the rest of the crowd being men of various ages. From their songs they might have been taken for Salvation Army people but that they wore no uniforms and that their appearance was that of people somewhat better in circumstances than the generality of the Salvation soldiers.

Whoever they were there was no doubt of the fact that they had sung much together, for their voices blended admirably, and they gave to the rather uproarious hymns which they sung touches of harmony that were never in the original versions. As the train went on the car became crowded to an uncomfortable degree, and the platforms at each end were so blocked that the guards could hardly manipulate the gates. Presently the chorus struck into the familiar hymn, "I love to tell the story," and here and there in the audience there became evident an inclination to join in.

"Help us along," said one of the singers between the verses. "Don't be afraid to sing. If you've got a voice, use it."

A burly negro, who, since his entrance to the car, had been slowly elbowing his way toward the chorus, joined in with a sonorous bass, encouraging two small boys behind him to add their shrill, clear tones to the chorus. Then a man sitting next to one of the women singers, in immaculate evening dress and a silk hat, who had been struggling with himself for some time divided between the impulse to join in and the fear of making himself ridiculous, contributed a fine tenor voice as his share of the proceedings. Two superbly overdressed young women in a cross seat thereupon took courage and chimed in, and presently every person in the car who had a voice to use was using it to its utmost, even the guards incorporating their announcement of stations in the melody. Tune followed tune, the leader of the original singers giving but little pause between the hymns. The melodies were simple and easy to catch, and people who didn't know the words, as most of them didn't, got along very well without them.

The dozen singers got out at Forty-second street, still singing as they left. Then for the first time, it seemed to strike the crowd that they had been conducting themselves with a very unusual forgetfulness of conventionalities. The two small boys giggled inanely. The big negro grinned. The man in the silk hat contemplated the advertising signs with a great show of interest. The two flashy women looked thoughtful. As the train went on a very marked silence settled down upon the car, broken only by the announcements of the guards, made in voices gruffer than usual.—New York Sun.

Early European Postal Events.

1500, March 1. (O. S.) Francis de Taxis appointed "capitaine et maistre de nos postes" by Philip, regent of the Netherlands, at Ghent. It is a matter of record that the Taxis posts carried English mails from Calais to Vienna and Rome before 1500.

1504, Jan. 18, (O. S.) Francis de Taxis instructed to establish regular posts between Brussels and the capitals of Germany, France and Spain, with pay at 12,000 livres per annum.

1507, England had a "magister postarum," appointed by Henry VII. Possibly it was Sir Brian Tuke, who served until 1545.

1516, Nov. 12, Charles V. concluded a contract with Francis and Baptist de Taxis requiring them, for 11,000 gold ducats, to maintain posts between Brussels, the capitals of Germany, France and Spain and Naples. Every postoffice was to have two horses. The Brussels-Paris route was to be covered in 36 hours, Brussels-Burgos in seven days and Brussels-Naples in 14 days.—Postal Record.

LUNATICS WHO FEIGN INSANITY.

Curious Manifestations With Which the Experts Have to Deal.

"One would think that the last thing a really insane person would need or wish to do would be to pretend to be crazy," said an expert on insanity the other day. "Insane people, however, all have one peculiarity in common, no matter how diverse their symptoms are—none of them knows that he is crazy. In fact, a lunatic generally considers himself the most sane person in the neighborhood. Hence, when he desires to protect himself, as after committing some crime, one of the first things he often does is to feign insanity. It is only lately that this fact has been realized, and this has cost many lunatics their lives.

"For instance, a madman commits a murder. On arrest he begins to act in a way that seems to indicate insanity, but close watching betrays the fact that his symptoms are feigned. He is shamming. This has usually been regarded as conclusive evidence of his sanity. It is really nothing of the kind. The doctors know now that a lunatic will sham as quickly as a sane man, and his shamming, being often clumsily done, is much more apt to be found out.

"Crazy people when feigning generally sham a different kind of insanity from that which they really possess. For instance, in a recently reported case a demented pauper was accustomed to proclaim loudly that he was insane, having been made so by an accumulation of tar and grease in his head. This was entirely sham, the man having found that it drew attention to him and gained him presents of tobacco. His real hallucinations he kept carefully in the background. The contrast between his obtrusive shamming and his concealment of his real symptoms was very curious.

"The desire to attract attention is very strong on the part of some lunatics, and it is possible that in many of the cases that interest visitors at asylums where the patient asserts that he is Queen Victoria or Julius Cæsar, the whole thing is a sham. In one recorded case an asylum patient was much put out by finding that a companion, who claimed to have written some of Shakespeare's plays, attracted the attention of visitors. He accordingly went the man one better by claiming to have written all the works of Byron, Shelley and Milton. This claim, he admitted to the physicians, was fraudulent, and he made it to visitors only.

"In Chicago several years ago a supposedly harmless lunatic, who was confined in the bridewell awaiting legal action on his condition, brained a crippled fellow prisoner with the latter's wooden leg. On being charged with the deed, he showed very plainly that, though he appreciated his situation, he was determined to sham insanity, putting on a vacant look in reply to all questions. Another Chicago case was that of a man who had committed murder by command, as he claimed, of the Virgin Mary. His lawyers, who supposed him sane, advised him to feign insanity, which he did, pretending to be raving mad. The sham and the real insanity were both detected by the experts, and the man was sent to an asylum.

"This peculiarity of lunatics makes the task of a modern expert on insanity doubly hard. He has to deal not only with sane persons pretending to be insane and with insane persons pretending to be sane, but with lunatics who feign insanity. By skillful examination and cross examination he has to elicit the truth from all these unwilling witnesses. His task is scarcely an enviable one."—New York World.

Whittier's Way.

John G. Whittier was greatly loved by strangers, who not only called on him, but thriftily insisted on putting up with him all night. "Thee has no idea," said his sister, "how much time Greenleaf spends trying to lose these people in the streets. Sometimes he comes home and says: 'Well, sister, I had hard work to lose him, but I have lost him. But I can never lose a her.' The women are more pertinacious than the men. Don't thee find them so, Maria?'"—San Francisco Argonaut.

Fate.

"It seems," sadly mused the postage stamp that had been bought at the corner drug store, "that I am driven from piller to post."—Cincinnati Tribune.

Consumption kills more people than rifle balls. It is more deadly than any of the much dreaded epidemics. It is a stealthy, gradual, slow disease. It penetrates the whole body. It is in every drop of blood. It seems to work only at the lungs, but the terrible drain and waste go on all over the body. To cure consumption, work on the blood, make it pure, rich and wholesome, build up the wasting tissues, put the body into condition for a fight with the dread disease.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery fights in the right way. It will cure 98 per cent. of all cases if taken during the early stages of the disease. Its first action is to put the stomach, bowels, liver and kidneys into good working order. That makes digestion good and assimilation quick and thorough. It makes sound, healthy flesh. That is half the battle. That makes the "Discovery" good for those who have not consumption—but who are lighter and less robust than they ought to be.

A FRIEND IN NEED.

The office of the Daily Bazoo was a dismal looking place. The dust on the desks and shelves and chairs was disturbed only at those times when the poverty-stricken editor was obliged to move his property in order to escape coming in personal contact with a neglected rent bill. Old newspapers were always strewn about, hither and thither, as if turned out of a huge sprinkling pot, and the floor was much blacker than the rusty stove that smoked and wheezed and made unprofitable efforts to warm itself and the Bazoo office to a tolerable condition of comfort. Jack Marston, the lank and bushy-haired editor, sat with his feet propped up on a yard-high waste basket. In a dark corner, all by herself, was a young woman, writing hurriedly on big sheets of yellowish paper. Occasionally Jack would peek over the top of the exchange he was clipping from and gaze with a curious squint at this newcomer. He had never approved of newspaper women anyhow. He considered petticoats in a newspaper office nothing less than nuisances, to be avoided as one would guard against rattlesnakes and poisonous plants. And here this girl had come to him and before he knew it he had put her at work getting up a woman's column. Articles on hair dressing and salads had been his especial abominations, too. When he thought this all over he wondered how long it would be before paresis would have complete control of his usually serene mental faculties. The girl's name was Ethel Hastings, and he found himself saying "Ethel Hastings" over and over again, and once he even wrote the words unconsciously on the dusty blue blotter that covered his desk.

Jack regarded his own actions with awe and ignorance. At first he was surprised and gave himself a thoughtful lecture in which he called himself most abusive names with alarming extravagance. But after awhile he gave up trying to solve this problem that had heretofore never bothered him and simply resigned himself to fate and paresis.

The Bazoo wasn't much of a paper. The town where the Bazoo tried to print out its first existence wasn't much of a town, either. A few years before Jack had succumbed to the scribbling fever and placed all his money into an almost worthless publication, which managed to drag him down deeper in debt each week. It wasn't long before he grew dispirited, and with discouragement came an exaggerated lankness of body and bushiness of hair and beard. Jack was still a young man, only twenty-nine, but the atmosphere of the slow-going town had somehow or other been instilled in him and he was in immediate need of waking up.

Salary day was a day of misery to Jack. He never knew whether he'd be obliged to go home to his boarding house with 3 cents or $3 in his pocket. The Bazoo was not on an oversound financial basis. Jack was a good-hearted fellow, but he had to influence himself into discharging all unnecessary employes, and the force soon became reduced to three reporters, a city editor, an advertising man, a proof-reader and five compositors. Yet, with the knowledge of his poverty constantly held up before his wearied eyes, he had so far forgotten himself as to deliberately employ this pretty young woman, to whom he had promised to pay a salary of $15 a week.

Fifteen dollars a week was more than any of the Bazoo reporters received, and the city editor considered his $18 a lordly income. Jack gave another look at the young woman in the corner and made another effort to think out how it all came about. He remembered that he was reading proof when Miss Hastings came timidly through the doorway. His first thought was that she had something to sell and he contracted his eyebrows a trifle tighter and enfolded himself more snugly in the big, dusty proof-sheets.

"I beg your pardon," Miss Hastings had said timidly, and in the sweetest voice imaginable, as she walked over to the proof-sheets and the editor. "I called to see if you would give me employment. I worked for three years on several of the big New York dailies and know the business very well."

After that the interview was a misty blank to Jack. The clearest recollection he had retained was a picture himself unwinding his long legs, shuffling out of his chair and offering a seat to his fair visitor.

Miss Hastings had been at the Bazoo office two weeks and in that time had instilled much of her natural brightness and sparkle into Jack Marston's paper. She established a crisply written column of town gossip and wrote up her general reporting news in a clever and cheerful style. Tom, of course, was delighted with her work and soon thought differently about newspaper women in general. Had it not been for those troublesome pay-days Jack would have been perfectly content to spend his life in the dust-begrimed Bazoo office.

It was the third pay-day after Miss Hastings' arrival that the trouble first began. Jack's funds gave out and he had to make his men content themselves with half-pay. The next week affairs were in the same pitiful condition and a month after the beginning of the disagreeable business Jack found his pay-roll two months behind. Then the men rebelled. The reporters—and even the city editor himself—laid down their pencils and pads and said they wouldn't work another day unless at least one week's salary were forthcoming. Jack was in despair. He sent word to a number of his old advertisers and tried to collect the month's bills in advance, but the money he got from that source would scarcely pay off his indebtedness to the city editor.

The reporters and compositors lounged around the office and talked in ominous undertones. Jack, in his own little den, had plunged his head into a pile of newspapers on his desk, and sighed deeply as he realized that the time had come for the Bazoo to go under. He was suddenly aroused by the rustling of skirts. He looked up into Miss Hastings' face and tried to smile.

"Well," said Jack, "It looks as if to-day's edition ends the Bazoo's illustrious career. Every man here except the foreman of the press room and one old compositor has refused to stand by me any longer."

Miss Hastings appeared quite unconcerned.

"I don't see any immediate danger of the Bazoo's death," said she. "So long as there are two men to set up type I think we might get out the paper ourselves."

Jack jumped up out of his chair. Then, ashamed he sat down again and tried to appear dignified. Miss Hastings ran out of the room and came back with the city editor's scale of assignments.

"I'll cover these," she said, "and you needn't bother about the local page." And then she bounced out of the doorway and up the street.

The crowd of angry employes soon took themselves and their mutterings away. Jack, encouraged by Miss Hastings' enthusiasm and good-will, went to work with unusual energy. He wrote editorials and paragraphs and clipped special articles from the exchanges. Along about 8 o'clock Miss Hastings appeared as fresh and unwearied as if she had been getting the details of a small reception. She had interviewed a man who had the night before tried to end his life. She had looked up a small railroad accident and got the details of two fires, besides a lot of less important bits of news.

It was later than usual when the Bazoo went to press that night, but when the paper came out no one would have suspected that the managing editor and a girl of 19 had prepared the entire edition.

It was after 4 o'clock in the morning when Jack Marston stood with Ethel Hastings at the door of her boarding house. The dawn was just beginning to break a rosy way over the eastern sky and the air was crisp and fresh. Jack looked at Ethel's tired face and felt a feeling of sadness that was rather unusual in its warmth and tenderness.

He tried to thank her for her great kindness, but made a miserable failure of it and stammered along in a most embarrassing manner.

"Please don't try to thank me," she said. "It was simply a matter of business, anyhow. But to-morrow I want you to sell me a share of the Bazoo," she continued. "We'll get some new men and I'm of the opinion that the paper can be made a success."

And from that day on the Bazoo has prospered. Of course, Jack and Ethel are married and except for a yellow-haired toddler that demands considerable attention the Bazoo is the greatest subject of mutual interest and admiration.

A THIRTY-FIVE POUND BOAT.

Run by Electricity and a Handy Thing for an Outing.

The coming summer will certainly be the most active season ever known in this country among the manufactures of electric steam launches. There is a "sickness" about the electric launch which makes those who possess it vow they would never go back to steam or naphtha. One important factor in its popularity is that women like it, for they can wear the daintiest dress throughout the longest summer day without fear of dirt or soiling when the motive power is the silent, unobtrusive cell, hidden away out of sight.

It is not every one is able to afford an electric launch, but every one who owns a rowboat or a sailboat can, at but slight expense, fit it up so as to be electrically propelled. Several devices for this purpose have been lately invented. One of these is a detachable motor and propeller. The whole thing weights only 35 pounds, and it is worked by batteries placed under the stern seat.

The motor and propeller wheel are supported upon a movable tube flexibly conected with each other, and the tube has an attachment for adjusting it to various forms of boats in the same manner and with the same ease that a rubber is shaped. This produces a combined propelling and steering mechanism, entirely superseding any form for rubber for steering purposes.

It is so easily carried and adjusted that it is sure to be in request among hunters and tourists in the mountain lake regions, as well as among boatmen in general. There is something very seductive to the summer loafer in the idea of being able to row his skiff until he is tired and then to let the boat paddle its own way back while he enjoys his smoke and well-earned rest. Another form of electric rubber has been brought out in England, which weight about 45 pounds.

It is combined with a propelling apparatus, which can be attached to or detached from an ordinary boat or canoe, in a new minutes, without the necessity of altering the vessel to which it is attached. The storage batteries which actuate it weigh about 85 pounds.

They are supposed to store enough hours energy to propel the boat for brought out in England which weighs miles an hour. It is said that the complete apparatus can be suplied at about one-third the price of an ordinary electric launches.—Pittsburg Dispatch.

Charms of an Ugly Princess.

The Metternichs in Paris during the Second Empire made their mark at once by the style of their equipages, their aristocratic mode of spending money, the elegant figure of the Princess, her wondrous chic, her air of breeding, her wild spirits, cleverness in repartee, independent ways and insolence. Her striking but not disagreeable ugliness was also in her favor. It gave one an agreeable shock the first time one saw her. The face hardly seemed human. Her flat nose, wide mouth, extending literally from ear to ear, poor forehead and curious eyes, were a survival of far-back Hunnish ancestors on the Sandor side. The figure was slender and flexible as a willow rod, and everything she wore suited her. She said and did exactly as she pleased; laid down the social law by going in for social lawlessness to the Empress Eugine and made Thresa the fashion by taking lessons from her. Therest went to the Austrian Embassy to give them. The Princess expressed astonishment at finding that famous singer, of the Alcazar tres

An Official Prayer.

The following is an exact translation from the Arabic of official prayer of Islam, which is used throughout Turkey, and daily repeated in the Cairo "Azhar" University by 10,000 Mohammedan students from all lands: "I seek refuge with Allah from Satan, the accursed. In the name of Allah the Compassionate, the Merciful. O Lord of all Creatures! O Allah! Destroy the infidels and polytheists, thine enemies, the enemies of the religion! O Allah! Make their children orphans and defile their abodes, and cause their feet to slip, and give them, and their families, and their households, and their women, and their children, and their relatives by marriage, and their brothers, and their friends, and their possessions, and their race, and their wealth, and their lands, as booty to the Moslems. O Lord of all Creatures"

A LITTLE HERO.

He Could Die Gladly, but Never Would He Betray His Trust.

The little drummer boy of the civil war, sounded the reveille or beat taps, will always be an interesting figure among Grand Army men. A correspondent of the Syracuse "Courier" writes of an incident in the life of Prof. Baldwin, of that city, who served as a drummer boy during the war.

The Union general wished to gain some information regarding the location of the rebel army. The little drummer boy was selected to obtain the desired knowledge. Dusty and tired he started out after dark on this dangerous mission. Before he was aware of the fact he was within the rebel lines and a prisoner.

He was brought before the commanding officer and charged with being a spy. A drum-head court martial was ordered and the little drummer boy speedily convicted. On account of his extreme youth his liberty was offered him providing he would be a drummed boy in the rebel ranks.

His answer was characteristic of the boy:

"No! I would rather be shot than be a rebel."

So sentence was passed and he was ordered to be shot on the morrow at sunset. Just before sundown the next day he was marched out and placed in position preparatory to the last act in the tragedy. The little fellow said: "Give me a drum and I'll play a tattoo while you shoot me."

He was blindfolded, and as his last look, as he supposed of earth passed out of view, he noticed a cloud of dust in the distance. Soon a shout of Federal cavalry was sounded, the rattle of musketry and shouting of men, a friendly hand loosed the bandage from his eyes, his hands were liberated and he was free among Union cavalry going back to camp.

No Mystery in It.

A Baltimore man is the father of four children. The oldest, a boy now about 15, was born deaf and dumb. He was a precocious child, and at the age of 6, had learned lip language so well that he could understand the words that were being pronounced by watching the mouth of the speaker. This he could do with an entire stranger. His vision is something marvelous, both as to acuteness and range. One night last week his father took him to see a famous magician who was then performing in Baltimore. The boy watched half a dozen feats in legerdemain, and then signed to his father that he wanted to go home. "This does not interest me," he said rapidly with his fingers. "Why do these people applaud? What is there to see?"

The parent was somewhat astonished. He thought the performance would be in the nature of a treat. Nevertheless, he complied with the request, and, with his son, left the theater. Then he asked him why he had not been entertained.

"Because," answered the boy in sign language, "that man picked up a pack of cards, took out one and hid it under his vest. Then he took a coin and pretended to swallow it, but kept it in his hand," and the mute went on and described each and every trick he had witnessed. There was no slight of hand about any of them to him. His eye was so quick that he detected the deception at once, and not knowing it was intended to be a deception, could not understand why people should waste the time watching a man go through certain motions.

This is an actual instance, and proves that the eye can be educated to be quicker than the hand.—New York Mail and Express.

Nothing New.

Last year some enterprising person got up what he thought was a new and clever joke about congress. He issued a little book, bound in a green paper cover, bearing the title, "What Congress Has Done." Inside were some ten or twenty blank pages, the idea being that congress had wasted its time and done nothing. Every one laughed at this, for it did seem like a good joke and a new one, but in looking over an old file of papers some weeks ago a correspondent discovered the following paragraph: "Coining jokes is a very common figure of speech; but we know of only one instance in which a joke was actually coined, struck from a graven die, and issued from a legal mint. The fact is historical and is as follows. In the year 1679 the Danes advanced with a large force upon Hamburg, but after a seige of considerable duration, seeing but little hope of ultimate success, they finally withdrew and marched back. Thereupon the Hamburgers caused a medal to be struck in commemoration of the event. On one side of this numismatic curiosity was the inscription: 'The King of Denmark came before Hamburg. What he gained by it will be seen on the other side.' On the other side was a total blank." This would seem to be additional proof of the truth of the assertion that there is nothing new under the sun, particularly in the line of jokes.—Harper's Young People.

Odd and Even.

This is a very good trick and cannot fail. Get some one to take an even number of buttons, marble beans, anything will do that can be held easily in the closed hand. Let an odd number of the samp be put in the other hand. As soon as all is ready say, "Multiply the number in the right hand by some odd figure and the number in the right hand by some odd figure and the number in the left hand by some one even one, and tell me whether the products added together are odd or even." If even, the even number is in the right hand and the odd in the left; and if odd, the even is in the left and the odd in the right.

For instance: Let the right hand number be 6, and the left hand number be five. Multiply the right hand number by 3 and you will have 18, and the left hand number by 4 will give you 20; 20 and 18 equal 38, so the even number was in the right hand.

How Japs Launch Their Ships.

The Japanese apply one of their many "pretty ways," to the launching of ships. They use no wine. They hang over the ship's prow a little pastboard cage full of birds and the moment the ship is afloat, a man pulls a string, when the cage opens, and the birds fly away, making the air alive with music and the whirr of wings. The idea is that the birds thus welcome the ship as she begins her career as a thing of life.—Tid-Bits.

They Wear Spangles.

Spangles are vastly in favor this spring, not only in brilliant green and old rose, shown up in the best shop windows elaborately thrown over dress goods of silk and black crepon, but set out at the embroidery counters for the new designs for cushions, book covers, hand screens and portfolios. They are to be had in every color and shade of a color, to represent foliage, flowers and jewels. They are used alone and in combination with beads that represent jewels. Sometimes parts of the designs are done in embroidery silks, and the spangles and beads are used to brighten them in suitable places. They are also used as borders or frames to figure or landscape pictures painted on boxes of candle-shades of satin. Silk and gauze are both used as a foundation for the work. The material is stretched tightly over a frame and the spangles and beads are sewed in place with waxed silk that matches them in color. Dragons, butterflies and beetles and all sorts of insects look well done in spangles of brilliant coloring, and flower designs are most effective in delicate hues.

Completely Paralyzed.

PHYSICIANS ARE ASTOUNDED BY A PECULIAR CASE.

A Young Man Stricken With Landry's Paralysis and Yet Recovers.

(From the Times, Philadelphia, Pa.)

Stricken with Landry's Paralysis and yet cured. That means but little to the average layman but it means a miracle to a physician. Such is the rare experience of O. E. Dallimore, of Madison, N. J.

"Yes, it is true that I had Landry's Paralysis," said Mr. Dallimore to a reporter, "or else the most celebrated physicians of London were mistaken.

"It was on the 15th of March, this year," he continued, "when I was in New York City, that I first felt the symptoms of my trouble. I experienced difficulty in going upstairs, my legs failing to support me. I consulted a physician, who informed me that I had every symptom of Locomotor Ataxia, but as the case developed he pronounced it a case of Landry's Paralysis and knowing the nature of the disease, advised me to start for my home and friends. I gave up my work and on April 1st started for London, Ont. A well-known physician was consulted, but I grew rapidly worse and on Saturday, April 7, several eminent physicians held a consultation on my case and informed me that I was at death's door, having but three to six days to live, still I lingered on, by this time completely paralyzed, my hands and feet being dead, I could hardly whisper my wants and could only swallow liquids, and death would realy have been a welcome visitor.

"Now comes the part that has astounded the physicians. Rev. Mr. Gondy, a clergyman who visited me in my last hours, as he supposed, told me of the marvelous cures of paralysis that had been performed by Dr. Williams' Pink Pills for Pale People. I started to take the pills about April 28 and a week after that felt an improvement in my condition. There was a warm, tingling sensation in the limbs that had been entirely dead and I soon began to move my feet and hands, the improvement continued until May 28, when I was taken out of bed for a drive and drove the horse myself. By the first of July I was able to walk upstairs alone and paid a visit to Niagara.

Slowly but surely I gained my old health and strength leaving Ontario for New York on Oct. 11 and beginning my work again on Oct. 26, 1894. Cured of Landry's Paralysis in eight months." To confirm his story beyond doubt Mr. Dallimore made affidavit.

Sworn and subscribed before me Dec. 4, 1894.

Dr. Williams' Pink Pills contain all the elements necessary to give new life and richness to the blood and restore shattered nerves. They are for sale by all druggists, or may be had by mail from Dr. Williams' Medicine Company, Schenectady, N. Y., for 50 cents per box, or six boxes for $2.50.

An Effective Substitute.

Mr. Dinwiddie—I read to-day about a man ninety-nine years of age who never wore eye-glasses in his life.

Mrs. Dinwiddie—How very wonderful!

Mr. Dinwiddie—Not so very wonderful, either. He wears spectacles.—Pittsburg Chronicle-Telegraph.

One Thing at a Time.

"When I drink much I can't work, so I let it alone."

"The drinking?"

"No, the working."

Husband—Never! I always lose!—New York Weekly.

That Was the Reason.

Willets—What's Blobson doing now?

Gilletts—He isn't doing anything. He's got a government position.—Dallas, Texas, Times-Herald.

Parker's Ginger Tonic is popular for its good work. Suffering, tired, sleepless, nervous women find nothing so soothing and reviving.

Spring Medicine

The best Preparation for this Purpose is

Hood's Sarsaparilla

Spring is the season for cleansing and renewing the blood. During the winter it has crept sluggishly through the veins, gathering impurities from indoor air, from fatty substances in the food, and from many other sources.

The great blood purifying medicine especially prepared to do this work is Hood's Sarsapdrilla. It will give to the blood purity, richness and vitality and these will bring health and vigor, strong nerves, a good appetite, refreshing sleep, and powers of endurance.

Cleanse your blood by taking Hood's Sarsaparilla, a renovating preparation especially prepared to make pure blood, then you may enjoy the season of flowers and birds and out-door pleasures, for you will be healthy, strong and well.

"I cannot speak too highly of Hood's Sarsaparilla, as it has worked wonders in my case. I am 74 years of age and have been afflicted with salt rheum on my hands for a great many years. I tried many things to cure them, but failed. My hands would crack open and bleed profusely, and the pain was terrible to bear. Since taking Hood's Sarsaparilla the flesh has healed and the skin is as smooth as any farmer's. I recommend Hood's Sarsaparilla as a reliable medicine and always speak in its favor."—LLOYD B. CHASE, Swansea, Mass.

True Blood Purifier

Prominently in the public eye to-day. Be sure to get Hood's and only Hood's.

Crepons and all sorts of creped fabrics will remain in highest favor for both spring and summer gowns. The wool crepons are a safe and serviceable investment, and have in a degree usurped the place of serge and cheviot. There are very many new designs in crepon—black, green, brown, blue and fawn color; but no variety of crinkled goods now looks old style. There is a large invoice of silk crepons, crinkly, semi-transparent patterns, and sheer cotton crepons, all more beautiful in coloring than ever before. Some of the striped crepons are beautifully shaded, and expensive Lyons silk crepons have flowered grounds and an alternate stripe in open work. These textiles are made up over plain taffeta silk, but require little or no trimming save lace on the corsage.

The Dinner Bell

Sounds but a mockery to the dyspeptic. He hears it, of course, but his stomach does not respond to the call. He "goes through the motions" and suffers afterwards for the small amount of victuals he partakes of. Hostetter's Stomach Bitters alters his condition into one of ability to eat plentifully, digest heartily, and assimilate thoroughly. Malaria, rheumatism, constipation and biliousness are conquered by this world-famed medicine.

Absent Minded.

The Mother—Yes, our baby weighed twelve pounds when it was born.

The Retired Butcher (deeply interested)—Without the bones?

He Knew Him.

"So Mr. Westside is not in?"

"No, sah. What name shall I tell him, when he returns, sah?"

"No name necessary; I am an intimate friend of his."

World's Columbian Exposition

Will be of value to the world by illustrating the improvements in the mechanical arts, and eminent physicians will tell you that the progress in medicinal agents has been of equal importance, and as a strengthening laxative Syrup of Figs is far in advance of all others.

One Good Deed.

Mrs. De Rue—If you ever did any good in this wide world, I'd like to know what it is.

Mr. De Rue—Well, for one thing, I saved you from dying an old maid.—New York Weekly.

"What are hot house eyes, pray" she asked.

"Those cultivated under glasses."

Do You Know—

That a girl should never gossip about her young friends.

That she should never number among her acquaintances a man who is in the least rude to her?

That she should avoid girl friends who are jealous of her fondness for other girls?

That she should above all things be helpful to those about her?

That she should shun "moods" as she would a pestilence

That she must be sunny-tempered always if she would be the girl whom everybody loves?

Something About French Heels.

Much has been written upon the utility and comfortability of French heels both pro and con. It has been claimed that if the present agitation against corsets is successful the efforts of dress reformers will then be directed against high heels. What a well-known society woman remarks upon the question is very interesting. We shall et her speak in her own terse and pungent manner: "Let those wear flat heels who never knew any other kind of heel. I mean country girls and village maidens. I stand on the broad assertion that a woman who has cultivated muscles for French heels simply cannot walk in the street with flat heels. There now. The calves of my legs are sore for a month whenever I try to go out with a pair of flat heels. I simply will not make a fool of myself for the sake of heels!" There, now! That, of course, settles the matter forever.

An Unkind Cut.

Young Stoutly—Where's my father? Oh, he's off to the cattle show! I never see much of him. His main hobby in life is fat pigs.

Miss Prettypirl—I wonder he does not take more interest in you.

In Chicago, of Course.

She—You say you were never in love. How near did you ever come to being in love?

He—Well, pretty near. I've been married three times.

CONSUMPTION

A GREAT COUGH REMEDY.

Perhaps you may think that Scott's Emulsion is only useful to fatten babies, to round up the angles and make comely and attractive, lean and angular women, and fill out the hollow cheeks and stop the wasting of the consumptive, and enrich and vitalize the blood of the scrofulous and anæmic persons. It will do all this—but it will do more. It will cure a when the ordinary cough syrups and specifics entirely fail. The cough that lingers after the Grip and Pneumonia will be softened and cured by the balsamic healing and strengthening influences of this beneficent food-medicine, namely, Scott's Emulsion of Cod-liver Oil and Hypophosphites of Lime and Soda.

Hard, Stubborn Cough
